Opinions are the rattles of immature intellects, but the advanced reasons have outgrown them. Glauville.

They want no rattles for their froward mood, Nor urble to reconcile them to their food. Dryden.
Farewel then verse, and love, and ev'ry toy, Be rhymes and rattles of the mau or boy; What right, what true, what fit we justly call, Let this be all my care, for this is all. Pope.

A plant. [crispa galli, Latin.] An herb resembling a cock's comb; loufewort.

RA'TTLEHEAD. adj. [rattle and head.]

Giddy; not steady.

RA'TTLE. n. f. A kind of serpent.

The rattlesnake is so called, from the rattle at the end of his tail. Grew.
She takes her being at the very sight of him, and hops plump into his arms, like a charmed bird at the mouth of a rattlesnake. Moore.

RA'TTLE. n. f. Root. n. f.

Rattlesnake root, called also fence, belongs to a kind of native of Virginia; the Indians use it as a certain remedy against the bite of a rattlesnake. Hill.

lay waste; to sack; to ransack; to spoil; to pillage; to plunder.

Already Caesar Has ravaged more than half the globe, and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword. Add.

His blasts obey, and quit the howling hill, The shatter'd forest, and the ravag'd vale. Thom.

RA'VAGE. n. f. [ravage, Fr. from the verb.] Spoil; ruin; waste.

Some cruel pleasure will from thence arise, To view the mighty ravage of your eyes. Dryden.

Would one think twice possible for love To make such ravage in a noble soul! Addis.

Those savages were not then, what civilized mankind is now; but without mutual society, with out arms of offence, without houses or fortifications, an obvious and exposed prey to the ravage and devouring beasts. Bentley.

RA'VAGER. n. f. [from ravage.] Plunderer; spoiler.

When that mighty empire was overthrown by the northern people, vast sums of money were buried to escape the plundering of the conquerors, and what remained was carried off by their ravagers. Swift.
RAU'CITY. n. f. [raucus, Lat.] Hoarseness; loud rough noise.

Inequality not stayed upon, but passing, is rather an encrease of sweetness; as in the purring of a wretched string, and in the raucity of a trumpet. Bacon.

To RA'VE. v. n. [reten, Dut. réter, Fr.]

1. To be delirious; to talk irrationally.

Men who thus rave, we may conclude their brains are turned, and one may as well read lectures at Bedlam as treat with such. Gor. of the Tongue.
It soon infecteth the whole member, and is accompanied with watching and raving. Wysman.
Her grief has wrought her into frenzy; The images her troubled fancy forms Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed. Sometimes the raves for music, light, and air; Nor air, nor light, nor music calms her pains. Smith.

2. To burst out into furious exclamations as if mad.

Shall these wild dissemblers of my mind, This tempest of thy tongue, thus rave, and find No opposition? Scud.

Our ravings and complaints are but like arrows shot up into the air, at no mark, and so to no purpose. Temple.

Wonder at my patience, Have I not cause to rave, and beat my breast, To rend my heart with grief, and run distracted? Addis.

Revenge, revenge, thus raving through the streets, I'll cry for vengeance. Southern.

He swore he could not leave me, With ten thousand ravings. Race.

3. To be unreasonably fond; with upon before the object of fondness. A colloquial and improper sense.

Another partiality is as fantastical and wild, attributing all knowledge to the ancients or the moderns; thus raving upon antiquity, in matter of poetry, Horace has wittily exposed in one of his satires. Locke.

To RA'VE. v. a. [ravelen, Dutch, to entangle.]

1. To entangle; to entwine one with another; to make intricate; to involve; to perplex.

It then such praise the Macedonian got, For having rudely cut the Gordian knot; What glory's due to him that could divide Such ravel'd intricacies, has the knot untied, And without stroke to smooth a passage made, Where craft and malice such obstructions laid? Waller.

2. To unweave; to unknot; as, to ravel out a twist or piece of knit work.

Let him for a pair of reechy knees, Or pulling in your neck with his clank'd fingers, Make you to ravel all this matter out. Shakespeare.

Sleep, that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care. Shakespeare.

3. To hurry over in confusion. This seems to be the meaning in Digby.

They but ravel it over loosely, and pitch upon disputing against particular conclusions, that at the first encounter of them engage, seem harsh to them. Digby.

To RA'VE. v. n.

1. To fall into perplexity or confusion.

As you unwind her love from him, Left it should ravel, and be good to none, You must provide to bottom it on me. Shakespeare.
Give the reins to wandering thought, Regardless of his glory's diminution; Till by their own perplexities involv'd, They ravel more, still less resolv'd, But never find self satisfying solation. Milton.

2. To work in perplexity; to busy himself with intricacies.

It will be needless to ravel far into the records of elder times; every man's memory will suggest many pertinent instances. Decay of Pity.

The humour of raveling into all these mystical or intangled matters, mingling with the interest and passions of princes and of parties, and thereby heightened and inflamed, produced infinite disputes. Temple.

R'VELIN. n. f. [Fr.] In fortification, a work that consists of two faces, that make a salient angle, commonly called half moon by the soldiers: it is raised before the courlines or counterescarpes. Ditch.

RA'VE. n. f. [raven, Saxon.] A large black fowl, whose cry is supposed ominous.

The raven himself is hoarse, That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan Under my battlements. Shakespeare.

The cloyed will That satiate, yet unsatisfied desire, that tob Both filled and running, raving first the lamb, Longs after for the garbage. Shakespeare.

There is a conspiracy of the prophets, like a raving lion raving the prey. Enoch.

To RA'VE. v. n. To prey with rapacity.

Benjamin shall raven as a wolf; in the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night he shall divide the spoil. Gen.

They gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravening and a roaring lion. Isaiah.

The more they feed, they raven'd still for more; They drank from Dan, and left Peorthen poor; But when time lay pretentful till by chance, The Gormand made it their inheritance. Dryden.

Convulsions in man's nerves and cars his breath, His flying life is chas'd by raving pains Through all his doubles in the winding veins. Blackmore.

RA'VE. n. f. [from raven.] Furiously voracious; hungry to rage.

R A V

Thy desires
Are wolfish, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous. Shaksp.
As when a flock
Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote,
Against the day of battle, to a field
Where armies lie encamp'd come flying, lur'd
With scent of living carcases. Milton.

What! the kind Ismena,
That nur'd me, watch'd my sickness! oh, she watch'd me,
As ravenous vultures watch the dying lion. Smith.
RA'VENOUSLY. adv. [from ravenous.] With raging voracity.

RA'VENOUSNESS. n. f. [from ravenous.]
Rage for prey; furious voracity.
The ravenousness of a lion or bear are natural to them; yet their mission upon an extraordinary occasion may be an actus imperatus of divine providence. Hale.

RAUGER. The old pret. and part. pulf. of reach. Snatched; reaped; attained.
His tail was stretched out in wondrous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it raught.
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The ever-burning lamps from thence it brought. Spenser.

In like delights of bloody game
He troughed was till uper years he raught,
And there abode whilst any beast of name
Walk'd in that forest.
This staff of honour raught, there let it stand,
Where best it fits to be, in Henry's hand. Shaksp.
The hand of death has raught him. Shaksp.
Gritus furiously running in upon Schendin, violently raught from his head his rich cap of fables,

RA'VIS. n. f. [from raven; this were better written raven.]

1. Prey; food gotten by violence.
The lion strangled for his honesses, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin. Nahum.
To me, who with eternal famine pine,
Alike is hell, or paradise, or heav'n;
There best, where most with ravin I may meet. Milton.

2. Rapine; rapaciousness.
They might not be in a condition exposed to the ravins of any victim that may find them, being unable to escape. Ron.

RA'VINGLY. adv. [from rave.] With frenzy; with distraction.

In this depth of mutes and divers sorts of discourses, would the ravingly have remained. Sidney.

To RA'VISH. v. a. [ravir, French.]

1. To conspurate by force; to devour by violence.

They ravish'd the women and maids. Jametz.
They cut thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her. Shaksp.

2. To take away by violence.

These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee. Shaksp.

Their vow is made
To raulack Trpy, within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen sleeps. Shaksp.

His the appear'd;
And all his praise, to every syllable heard;
But then a rock, in size more amplified,
Then first he ravish'd to him. Chapman.

I owe myself the cure,
My fame and injur'd honour to repair;
From thy own tent, proud man, in thy despite,

3. To delight to rapture; to transport.

Thou hast ravish'd my heart. Canticles.
A ravish'd always with her love. Proverbs.

RA'VISHER. n. f. [ravisseur, French; from ravish.]

1. He that embraces a woman by violence.

They are cruel and bloody, common ravishers of women, and murderers of children. Spenser.

A ravisher must repair the temporal detriment to the mind, and give her a dowry, or marry her if he desire it. Taylor.

R A W

Turn hence those pointed glories of your eyes!
For if more charms beneath those circles rise,
So weak my virtue, they so strong appear,
I shall turn raisher to keep you here. Dryden.

2. One who takes any thing by violence.

Shall the raisher display your hair,
While the fops envy, and the ladies stare? Pope.

RA'VISHINGLY. adv. [from ravishing.] To extremity of pleasure.

As all the housewiferies of deities are
To hear a voice to ravishingly fair. Chapman.

RA'VISHMENT. n. f. [ravissement, French;
from ravish.]

1. Violation; forcible conspuration.

Of his several ravishments, betrayings and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables of his transformations and all that rabble of Grecian forgeries. Raleigh.

Tell them ancient stories of the ravishment of clastic maidens. Taylor.

I told them I was one of their knight-errants that delivered them from ravishment. Dryden.

2. Transport; rapture; ecstacy; pleading violence on the mind.

All things joy, with ravishment
Attracted by thy beauty full to gaze. Milton.

Can any mortal mixture of earth's mould
Breathe such divine enchanting ravishment? Milton.

What a ravishment was that, when having found out the way to venture Hiero's crown, he leaped out of the bath, and, as if he were suddenly posses-s'd, ran naked up and down! Wilkins.

RAW. adj. [bheap, Saxon; raa, Danish;
rouw, Dutch.]

1. Not subdued by the fire.

Full of great lumps of flesh, and goblets raw.
Spenser.

2. Not covered with the skin.

All about the wind cloth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's raw;
And hards it brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw. Shaksp.

It there be quick raw flesh in the ridings, it is an

3. Sore.

This her knight was feeble and too faint,
And all his sinews waven weak and raw
Through long imprisonment. Spenser.

4. Immature; unripe; not concocted.

5. Unseasoned; unripe in skill.

Some people, very raw and ignorant, are very unworthily and unskilfully nominated to places, when men of desert are held back and unpreferred. Raleigh.

People, while young and raw, and soft natured, are apt to think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of another man's, but when experience shall have once opened their eyes, they will find that a friend is the gift of God. South.

Sails were spread to every wind that blew,
Raw were the sailors, and the depths were new. Dry.

Well I knew
What perils youthful ardour would pursue,
Young as thou wert in dangers, raw to war. Dryd.

6. New. This seems to be the meaning.

I have in my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging jacks. Shaksp.

7. Bleak; chill.

They carried always with them that weed, as their house, their bed, and their garment; and coming lastly into Ireland, they found there more special use thereof, by reason of the raw cold climate. Spenser.

8. Youthful still in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatick day. Shaksp.

Once upon a raw and guffy day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores. Shaksp.

8. Not decocted.

Disill'd waters will last longer than raw waters. Bacon.

9. Not spun or twisted: as, raw silk.

RA'WBONED. adj. [raw and bone.] Having bones scarcely covered with flesh.

R A Z

Lean razen'd rascals! who would e'er suppose
They had such courage? Shaksp.

The wolf was content to barter away a razen
carcase for a smooth and fat one. L'Estrange.

RA'WHEAD. n. f. [raw and head.] The name of a spectre, mentioned to fright children.

Hence draw thy theme, and to the stage permit
Rawhead and bloody bones, and hands and feet, Ragouts for Tereus or Thyestes drest. Dryden.

Servants awe children, and keep them in subertion, by telling them of rawhead and bloody bones. Lack.

RA'WLY. adv. [from rau.]

1. In a raw manner.

2. Unskilfully; without experience.

3. Newly.

Some crying for a surgeon, some upon the debt
they owe, some upon their children rawly left. Shaksp.

RA'WNESS. n. f. [from raw.]

1. State of being raw.

Chalk helpeth concoction, so it be out of a deep well; for then it cureth the rawness of the water. Bacon.

2. Unskilfulness.

Charles v. considering the rawness of his men, established a pilot major for their examination. Hales.

3. Hasty manner. This seems to be the meaning in this obscure passage.

Why in that rawness left he wife and children Without leave taking? Shaksp.

RAY. n. f. [raie, rayon, Fr. radius, Lat.]

1. A beam of light.

These eyes that roll in vain
To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn. Miln.

The least light, or part of light, which may be stop alone, or do or fuller any thing alone, while the rest of the light doth not or suffers not, I call a ray of light. Newton.

Sol through white curtains shot a timorous ray.
And op'd those eyes that must eclipse the day. Shaksp.

2. Any lustre corporeal or intellectual.

The air sharpen'd his visual ray. Miln.
He now, observant of the parting ray,
Eyes the calm sunset of thy various day. Pope.

3. [raye, French; raia, Latin.] A fish.

4. [solium, Lat.] An herb. Amosack.

To RAY. v. a. [raye, Fr. from the noun.]
To streak; to mark in long lines. Shaksp.

old word.

Beside a bubbling fountain low the lay,
Which the increased with her bleeding heart,
And the clean waves with purple gore did ray. Spenser.

His horse is rayed with the yellows. Shaksp.
Was ever man so beaten? was ever man rayed? was ever man so weary? Shaksp.

RAY, for array.

RAZE. n. f. [rayz, a root, Spanish.] A root of ginger. This is common written race, but less properly.

I have a gammon of bacon and two raze of ger to be delivered. Shaksp.

To RAZE. v. a. [razer, Fr. razer, Lat.]
See RASE.

1. To overthrow; to ruin; to subvert.

Will you suffer a temple, how poorly built but yet a temple of your duty, to be razed? Shaksp.

He yoketh your rebellious necks,
Razeth your cities, and subverts your towns. Shaksp.

It grieved the tyrant, that to baste a tower so long hold out, to that he would threaten to it. Shaksp.

Shed christian blood, and populous cities
Because they're taught to use some razed razed. Shaksp.

We touch'd with joy
The royal hand that raz'd unhappy Troy. Shaksp.

The place would be razed to the ground, and foundations down with salt. Shaksp.

2. To efface.

REA

Real this marriage; cancelling your fame,
Raising the characters of your renown. Shakspere.
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Rise out the written troubles of the brain. Shaksp.
He in dejection sets
Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raise.
Quite out their native language; and instead,
To sow a jangling noise of words. Milton.

3. To extirpate.
I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their factions and their family. Shaksp.

RAZOR. n. f. [razor, Latin.] A knife with a thick blade and fine edge used in shaving.
Zeal, except ordered aright, useth the razor with such eagerness, that the life of religion is thereby hazard'd. Hooker.
These words are razors to my wounded heart.
Shakspere.

Those thy boist'rous locks, not by the sword
Of noble warrior, so to stain his honour,
But by the barber's razor best subdued. Milton.
Razor makers generally clip a small bar of Venice steel between two small bars of Flemish steel, and wed them together, to strengthen the back of the razor. Mozon.

As in smooth oil the razor best is whet,
So wit is by politeness sharpest set.
Their wit of edge from their offence is seen;
Each pains us least when exquisitely keen. Young.

RAZORS of a boar. A boar's tusks.
RAZORABLE. adj. [from razor.] Fit to be shaved. Not in use.
New born chins be rough and razorable. Shaksp.

RAZORING. n. f.
The fluting or razoring resembleth in length and breadth a man's finger. Carew.

RAZURE. n. f. [rasure, F. rasura, Lat.]
Act of erasing.
Oh! your defect speaks loud;
It well deserves with characters of bray
A blotched remembrance, 'gainst the tooth of time
And razure of oblivion. Shakspere.

RE. is an inseparable particle used by the Latin, and from them borrowed by us to denote iteration or backward action: as, return, to come back; to recede, to live again; repression, the act of driving back: reciprocation, as, to recriminate.
It is put almost arbitrarily before verbs and verbal nouns, so that many words so compounded will perhaps be found, which it was not necessary to infer. It sometimes adds little to the simple meaning of the word, as in rejoice.

REACCESS. n. f. [re and access.] Visit renewed.
Let pass the qualling and withering of all things by the recess, and their reviving by the reaccess of the sun. Hakewill.

TO REACH. v. a. ancient preterit raught.
[reacan, Saxon.]

1. To touch with the hand extended.
Round the tree
The hanging flood, but could not reach. Milton.
What are riches, empire, pow'r,
But larger means to gratify the will;
The steps by which we climb to rise and reach Our wish, and that obtained, down with a leafhold-ing
Of scepters, crowns and thrones: they've serv'd their end,
And there like lumber to be left and scorn'd?
Congreve.

2. To arrive at; to attain any thing distant; to strike from a distance.
The coast so long desir'd
Thy troops shall reach, and having reach'd, repent.
Dryden.
What remains beyond this, we have no more a positive notion of, than a mariner has of the depth of the sea; where, having let down his sounding line, he reaches no bottom. Locke.

REA

It must fall perhaps before this letter reaches your hands. Pope.

3. To strike from a distant place.
O patron pow'r, thy present aid afford,
That I may reach the beat! Dryden.

4. To fetch from some place distant, and give.
He reached me a full cup. Esdras.

5. To bring forward from a distant place.
Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands, and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side. John.

6. To hold out; to stretch forth.
These kinds of goodness are so nearly united to the things which desire them, that we scarcely perceive the appetite to stir in reaching forth her hand towards them. Hooker.

7. To attain; to gain; to obtain.
The best accounts of the appearances of nature, which human penetration can reach, come short of its reality. Chryse.

8. To transfer.
Through such hands
The knowledge of the gods is reach'd to man. Rowe.

9. To penetrate to.
Whatever alterations are made in the body, it they reach not the mind, there is no perception.
Locke.

10. To be adequate to.
The law reached the intention of the promoters,
and this act fixed the natural price of money. Locke.
If these examples of grown men reach not the case of children, let them examine. Locke.

11. To extend to.
Thy desire leads to no excess that reaches blame
Her imprecations reach not to the tomb,
They shut not out society in death. Addison.

12. To extend; to spread abroad.
Trees reach'd too far then pamp'ring boughs.
Milton.

13. To take in the hand.
Let he reach of the tree of life, and cut. Milton.

TO REACH. v. n.

1. To be extended.
We hold that the power which the church hath lawfully to make laws, doth extend unto sundry things of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and such other matters whereto their opinion is, that the church's authority and power doth not reach. Hooker.
The new world reaches quite thro' the torrid zone in one tropic to the other. Boyle.
When men pursue their thoughts of space, they are apt to stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end too, and reach'd no farther. Locke.
If I do not ask any thing improper, let me be buried by Theodorus; my vow reaches no farther than the grave. Addison.
The influence of the stars reaches to many events, which are not in the power of reason. Swift.

2. To be extended far.
Great men have reaching hands. Shakspere.

3. To penetrate.
He hath deliver'd the mirth to your hand, and ye have than them in a rage, that reaches up into heaven. Chronicles.
We reach forward into futurity, and bave up to our thoughts objects hid in the remotest depths of time. Addison.

4. To make efforts to attain.
Could a sailor always supply new line, and find the plummet sick without stopping, he would be in the posture of the mind, reaching after a positive idea of infinity. Locke.

REACH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Act of touching or seizing by extension of the hand.

2. Power of reaching or taking in the hand.
There may be in a man's reach a book containing pictures and discourses, capable to delight and instruct him, which yet he may never have the will to open. Locke.

3. Power of attainment or management.
In actions, within the reach of power in him, a man seems as free as it is possible for freedom to make him. Locke.

REA

4. Power; limit of faculties.
Our sight may be considered as a more diffusive kind of touch, that brings into our reach some of the most remote parts of the universe. Addison.
Be sure yourself and your own reach to know,
How far your genius, taste, and learning go. Pope.

5. Contrivance; artful scheme; deep thought.
Drawn by others, who had deeper reaches than themselves to matters which they least intended.
Hayward.
Some, under types, have affected obscurity to amuse and make themselves admired for profound reaches. Howel.

6. A fetch; an artifice to attain some distant advantage.
The duke of Parma had particular reaches and ends of his own underhand, to cross the design.
Bacon.

7. Tendency to distant consequences.
Strain not my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion. Shakspere.

8. Extent.
The confines met of empyrean heav'n,
And of this world, and, on the left hand, hell
With long reach interpos'd. Milton.

TO REACT. v. a. [re and act.] To return the impulse or impression.
The lungs being the chief instrument of sanguification, and acting strongly upon the chyle to bring it to an animal fluid, must be reacted upon as strongly. Arbuthnot.
Cut off your hand, and you may do
With t'other hand the work of two;
Because the soul her power contracts,
And on the brother limb reacts. Swift.

REACTION. n. f. [reaction, Fr. from react.]
The reciprocation of any impulse or force impressed, made by the body on which such impression is made: action and reaction are equal.
Do not great bodies conserve their heat the longest,
their parts heating one another; and may not great,
dense, and fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light so copiously, as, by the emission and reaction of its light, and the reflections and refractions of its rays within its pores, to grow still hotter till it comes to a certain degree of heat, such as is that of the sun? Newton.
Alimentary substances, of a mild nature, act with small force upon the solids, and as the action and reaction are equal, the smallest degree of force in the solids digests them. Arbuthnot.

READ. n. f. [rab, Saxon; raed, Dutch.]

1. Counsel.
The man is blest that hath not lent
To wicked read his ear. Steenhold.

2. Saying; law. This word is in both senses obsolete.
This reare is rife that oftentime
Great numbers fall unloft,
In humble dials is tooting fast,
The trade is not to tuckle. Spenser.

TO READ. v. a. pret. read, part. pass.
read. [rab, Saxon.]

1. To peruse any thing written.
I have seen her take forth paper, write upon't, read it, and afterwards feed it. Shakspere.
The passage you must have read, though since slip out of your memory. Pope.
If we have not leisure to read over the book it self regularly, then by the titles of chapters we may be directed to peruse several sections. Watts.

2. To discover by characters or marks.
An armed cate did lye
In whose dead face he read great ingenuinity. Spenser.

3. To learn by observation.
Those about her
From her still read the perfect ways of honour. Shakspere.

1. To repair any thing wasted by supplies.

He was longer in recruiting his flesh than usual; but by a milk diet he recovered it again. More.

REC

Increase thy care to save the sinking kind;
With greens and flow'rs recruit their empty lives,
And seek fresh force to sustain their lives. Dryd.
Her cheeks glow the brighter, recruiting their colour;
As flowers by sprinkling revive with fresh odour.

Granville.

This fun is set, but see in bright array
What hosts of heavenly lights recruit the day!
Love in a shining galaxy appears Triumphant fall.

Granville.

Seeing the variety of motion, which we find in the world is always decreasing, there is a necessity of confering and recruiting it by active principles;
such as are the cause of gravity, by which planets and comets keep their motions in their orbits, and bodies acquire great motion in falling. Newton.

2. To supply an army with new men.

He taught the call of Holland with the command of that army, with which he was to be recruited and assisted. Clarendon.

To RECRUIT, v. n. To raise new soldiers.

The French have only Switzerland besides their own country to recruit in; and we know the difficulties they meet with in getting thence a single regiment. Addison.

RECRUIT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Supply of any thing wanted; Pope has used it less properly for a substitute to something wanting.

Whatever nature has in worth deny'd,
She gives in large recruits of needful aid. Pope.
The endeavour to raise new men for the recruit of the army found opposition. Clarendon.

2. A new soldier.

The powers of Troy
With fresh recruits their youthful chief sustain:
Not their's a raw and unexperienc'd train,
But a firm body of embattel'd men. Dryden.

RECTANGLE, n. f. [rectangle, French; rectangulus, Latin.] A figure which has one angle or more of ninety degrees.

All Athens should decree, that in rectangle traangles the square, which is made of the side that includeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides containing the right angle, geometricians would not receive satisfaction without demonstration. Brown.

The mathematician considers the truth and properties belonging to a rectangle, only as it is in idea in his own mind. Locke.

RECTANGULAR, adj. [rectangulaire, Fr. rectus and angulus, Lat.] Right angled; having angles of ninety degrees.

Bricks moulded in their ordinary rectangular form, if they shall be laid one by another in a level row between any supporters sustaining the two ends, then all the pieces will necessarily sink. Watson.

RECTANGULARLY, adv. [from rectangu- lar.] With right angles.

At the equator, the needle will stand rectangularly; but approaching northward toward the tropics, it will regard the pole obliquely. Brown.

The natural heat of the parts being insufficient for a perfect and thorough digestion, the errors of one concoction are not rectifiable by another. Brown.

RECTIFICATION, n. f. [rectification, Fr. from rectify.]

1. The act of letting right what is wrong. It behoved the deity to renew that revelation from time to time, and to rectify abuses with such authority for the renewal and rectification, as was sufficient evidence of the truth of what was revealed. Forbes. 2. In chymistry, rectification is drawing any thing over again by distillation, to make it yet higher or finer. Quincy.

At the first rectification of some spirit of salt in a retort, a single pound afforded no less than six ounces of phlegm. Boyle.

To RECTIFY, v. a. [rectifier, French; rectus and facio, Latin.]

VOL. II.

REC

1. To make right; to reform; to redress.

That wherein unfounder times have done amiss,
The better ages ensuing must rectify as they may. Hooker.

It shall be bootless

That longer you defer the court, as well

For your own quiet, as to rectify

What is unsettled in the king. Shakspeare.

Where a long course of piety has purged the heart, and rectified the will, knowledge will break in upon such a soul, like the sun shining in his full might. South.

The substance of this theory I mainly depend on,
being willing to suppose that many particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts. Burnet.

If those men of party, who have been employed in vitiating the age, had endeavoured to rectify and amend it, they need not have sacrificed their good sense to their time. Addison.

The false judgments he made of things are owed; and the methods pointed out by which he rectified them. Atterbury.

2. To exalt and improve by repeated dis- tillation.

The skin hath been kept white and smooth for above fifteen years, by being included with recti-

RECTILINEAR, } adj. [rectus and linea, RECTILINEOUS, } Lat.] Consisting of right lines.

There are only three rectilineal and ordinate figures, which can serve to this purpose; and mordinate or unlike ones must have been not only less elegant, but unequal. Ray.

This image was oblong and not oval, but terminated with two rectilinear and parallel sides and two semicircular ends. Newton.

The rays of light, whether they be very small bodies projected, or only motion and force propagated, are moved in right lines; and whenever a ray of light is by any obstacle turned out of its rectilinear way, it will never return into the same rectilinear way, unless perhaps by very great accident. Newton.

RECTITUDE, n. f. [rectitude, Fr. from rectus, Lat.]

1. Straightness; not curvity.

2. Rightness; uprightness; freedom from moral curvity or obliquity.

Faith and repentance, together with the rectitude of their present engagement, would fully prepare them for a better life. King Charles.

To RECURRE, v. n. [recurro, Latin.]

1. To come back to the thought; to revive in the mind.

The idea, I have once had, will be unchangably the same, as long as it recurs the same in my memory. Locke.

In this life the thoughts of God and a future state often offer themselves to us; they often spring up in our minds, and when expelled, recur again. Calamy.

A line of the golden verses of the Pythagoreans recurring on the memory, hath often guarded youth from a temptation to vice. Watts.

When any word has been used to signify an idea, that old idea will recur in the mind when the word is heard. Watts.

2. [recourir, Fr.] To have recourse to; to take refuge in.

If to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recur to the punctum flans of the spheres, they will thereby very little help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration. Locke.

The second cause we know, but trouble not ourselves to recur to the first. Waller.

To RECURE, v. a. [re and cure.] To recover from sickness or labour. Not in use.

Through wise handling and fair governance,
I thus recured to a better will,
Purged from drugs of foul intemperance. Spenser.

To REFLECT. v. n.

1. To throw back light.

In dead men's tombs, and in those holes,
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in form of eyes, reflecting gems. Shakspeare.

2. To bend back.

Inanimate matter moves always in a straight line, and never reflects in an angle, nor bends in a circle, which is a continual reflection, unless either by some external impulse, or by an intrinsic principle of gravity. Bentley.

3. To throw back the thoughts upon the past or on themselves.

The imagination casts thoughts in our way, and forces the understanding to reflect upon them. Duppa.

In every action reflect upon the end, and in your understanding it, consider why you do it. Taylor.
Who hath, who could such ill events expect?
With shame on his own counsel, doth reflect. Denham.

When men are grown up, and reflect on their own minds, they cannot find any thing more ancient there, than those opinions which were taught them before their memory began to keep a register of their actions. Locke.

It is hard, that any part of my hand should be setled upon one who has us'd me to ill, and yet I could not see a spring of any bough of this whole walk of trees, but I should reflect upon her and her severity. Spectator.

Let the king dismiss his woes,
Reflecting on her fair reynan;
And take the cypress from his brows,
To put his wonted laurels on. Prior.

4. To consider attentively.

Into myself my reason's eye I turn'd;
And as I much reflected, much I mourn'd. Prior.

Neither do I reflect in the least upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation. Swift.

6. To bring reproach.

Errors of wives reflect on husbands still. Dryden.

REFLECTENT. adj. [reflectens, Lat.] Bending back; flying back.

The ray descendent, and the ray reflectent, flying with so great a speed, that the air between them cannot take a formal play any way, before the beams of the light be on both sides of it; it follows, that, according to the nature of humid things, it must first only swell. Digby.

REFLECTION. n. f. [from reflect: thence I think reflexion less proper: reflexion, Fr. reflexus, Latin.]

1. The act of throwing back.

The eye sees not itself,
But by reflection from other things. Shakspeare.
If the sun's light consist'd but of one sort of rays, there would be but one colour, and it would be impossible to produce any new by reflections or refractions. Cheyne.

2. The act of bending back.

Inanimate matter moves always in a straight line, nor ever reflects in an angle or circle, which is a continual reflection, unless by some external impulse. Bentley.

3. That which is reflected.

She shines not upon souls, lest the reflection should hurt her. Shakspeare.
As the sun in water we can bear,
Yet not the sun, but his reflection there.

So let us view her here, in what she was,
And take her image in this wat'ry glass. Dryden.

4. Thought thrown back upon the past, or the absent, on itself.

The three first parts I dedicate to my old friends, to take off those melancholy reflections, which the sense of age, infirmity, and death may give them. Denham.

This dreadful image so possess'd her mind,
She ceas'd all farther hope; and now began
To make reflection on the unhappy man. Dryden.
Job's reflections on his once flourishing estate, did at the same time afflict and encourage him. Atterb.

What wounding reproaches of soul must he feel,
From the reflection on his own ingratitude. Rogers.

5. The action of the mind upon itself.

Reflection is the perception of the operations of our own minds within us, as it is employed about the ideas it has got. Locke.

6. Attentive consideration.

This delight grows and improves under thought and reflection; and while it exercises, does also endear itself to the mind; at the same time employing and inflaming the meditations. South.

7. Censure.

He de'd; and oh! may no reflection sited
Its poisonous venom on the royal head. Prior.

REFLECTIVE. adj. [from reflect.]

1. Throwing back images.

When the weary king gave place to night,
His beams he to his royal brother lent,
And to those full in his reflective light. Dryden.
In the reflective stream the shining blade,
Viewing her charms impair'd, abash'd shall hide
Her purple head. Prior.

2. Considering things past; considering the operations of the mind.

For'd by reflective reason I confess,
That human science is uncertain guess. Prior.

REFLECTOR. n. f. [from reflect.] Considerer.

There is scarce any thing that nature has made, or that men do suffer, whence the devout reflector cannot take an occasion of an inspiring meditation. Boyle.

REFLEX. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Directed backward.

The motions of my mind are as obvious to the reflector, as the soul, or the turning of the intellectual eye inward upon its own actions, as the passions of my sense are obvious to my sense; I see the object, and I perceive that I see it. Hale.

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernible ends of them to exercise a right argument, that it is the workmanship, not of blind mechanism or blunder chance, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Bentley.

REFLEX. n. f. [reflexus, Lat.] Reflection.

There was no other way for angels to sin, but by reflect of their understandings upon themselves. Hooker.

I'll say you gray is not the morning's eye,
Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shakspeare.

REFLEXIBILITY. n. f. [from reflexible.]

The quality of being reflexible.

Reflexibility of rays is their disposition to be reflected or turned back into the same medium from any other medium, upon whose surface they fall, and rays are more or less reflexible, which are turned back more or less easily. Newton.

REFLEXIBLE. adj. [from reflexus, Lat.] Capable to be thrown back.

Sir Isaac Newton has demonstrated, by convincing experiments, that the light of the sun consists of rays differently refrangible and reflexible; and that those rays are differently reflexible, that are differently refrangible. Cheyne.

REFLEXIVE. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Having respect to something past.

That assurance reflexive cannot be a divine faith, but at the most an human, yet such as perhaps I may have no doubting mixed with. Hammond.

REFLEXIVELY. adv. [from reflexive.] In a backward direction.

Solomon tells us life and death are in the power of the tongue, and that not only directly in regard of the good or ill we may do to others, but reflexively also in respect of what may rebound to ourselves.

REFLOAT. n. f. [re and float.] Ebb, reflux.

The main float and reflow of the sea, is by consent of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion. Bacon.

To REFLOW. v. a. [re and flourish] To flourish anew.

Virtue given for lost Revives, vij. with s, then vigorous most,
When most unactive deem'd. Milton.

To REFLOW. v. n. [refluer, Fr. re and flow.] To flow back.

REFLUENT. adj. [refluens, Lat.] Running back; flowing back.

The liver receives the refluent blood almost from all the parts of the abdomen. Arbuthnot.

Tell, by what paths,
Back to the fountain's head the sea conveys
The refluent rivers, and the land repays. Blackmore.

REFLUX. n. f. [reflux, Fr. refluxus, Lat.] Backward course of water.

Reflexes
Mine own that 'bide upon me, all from me

To REFORM. v. a. [reformo, Lat. reformer, Fr.] To change from worse to better.

A sect in England, following the very same rule of policy, seeketh to reform even the French reformation, and purge out from thence all dregs of popery. Hooker.

Seat worthier of Gods, was built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old. Milton.

May no such storm
Fall on our times, where rain must reform. Denham.

Now low ring looks preface approaching times,
And now prevailing love her face reforms. Taylor.

One cannot attempt the perfect reforming the languages of the world, without rendering them ridiculous. Locke.

The example alone of a vicious prince will corrupt a rage; but that of a good one will not corrupt a virtue.

To REFORM. v. n. To pass by change from worse to better.

Was his doctrine of the mass struck out in the conflict? or did it give him occasion of reform in this point? Atterbury.

REFORM. n. f. [Fr.] Reformation.

REFORMATION. n. f. [reformation, Fr. from reform.]

1. Change from worse to better: commonly used of human manners.

Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current, scow'ring faults;
Nor over His dra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, as in this king. Shakspeare.

Satire lasses vice into reformation. Dryden.
The pagan converts mention this great reformation of those who had been the greatest sinners with that sudden and surprising change, which the christian religion made in the lives of the most prodigate. Addison.

2. [By way of eminence.] The change of religion from the corruptions of popery to its primitive state.

The burden of the reformation lay on Luther's shoulders. Atterbury.

REFORMER. n. f. [from reform.]

1. One who makes a change for the better; an amender.

Publick reformers had need first practice that on their own hearts, which they purpose to try on others. King Charles.

REF

The complaint is more general, than the endeavours to redress it: abroad every man would be a reformer, how very few at home! Spratt.

It was honour enough, to behold the English churches, reformed; that is, delivered from the reformers. South.

One of those who changed religion from popish corruptions and innovations. Our best reformers were famous confessors and martyrs all over the world. Bacon.

REFRACT. v. a. [refractus, Latin.] To break the natural course of rays.

If its angle of incidence be large, and the refractive power of the medium not very strong to throw it far from the perpendicular, it will be refracted. Cheyne.

Rays of light are urged by the refracting media. Cheyne.

REFRACTION. n. f. [refraction, Fr.]

Refraction, in general, is the incurvation or change of determination in the body moved, which happens to it whilst it enters or penetrates any medium: in dioptricks, it is the variation of a ray of light from that right line, which it would have pursued on, had not the density of the medium turned it aside. Harris.

Refraction, out of the rarer medium into the denser, is made towards the perpendicular. Newton.

REFRACTIVE. adj. [refract, Fr.] Having the power of refraction.

Those superficies of transparent bodies reflect the greatest quantity of light, which have the greatest refracting power; that is, which intercede mediums that differ most in their refractive densities. Newton.

REFRACTIVENESS. n. f. [from refractory.]

Sullen obstinacy.

I did never allow any man's refractoriness against the privileges and orders of the houses. K. Charles.

Great complaint was made by the prebiteran party, of my refractoriness to obey the parliament's act. Saunders.

REFRACTORY. adj. [refractorius, Fr. refractorius, Lat. and so should be written refractory. It is now accented on the first syllable, but by Shakespeare on the second.] Obstinate; perverse; contumacious.

There is a law in each well-order'd nation, To curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory. Shakespeare.

A rough brawn'd swain, being brought before a wide justice for some misdemeanor, was by him ordered to be sent away to prison, and was refractory after he heard his doom, inasmuch as he would not put a foot from the place where he stood; saying, it was better to stand, where he was, than go to a sure place. Bacon.

Anger compliance with any illegal and extravagant ways, like violent motions in nature, soon grows weary of itself, and ends in a refractory turbulence. King Charles.

Refractory martial! if thou wilt not trust thy hands, take what follows; know assuredly, before next full moon, that thou wilt be hung up in chains. Arbutnot.

These atoms of theirs may have it in them, but they are refractory and sullen; and therefore, like to a host of the same temper, must be banged and battered into reason. Bentley.

REFRAGABLE. adj. [refragabilis, Lat.] Capable of confutation and conviction.

REFRAIN. v. a. [refrainer, Fr. re and frangere, Lat.] To hold back; to keep from action.

Hold not thy tongue, O God, keep not still silence; refrain not thyself. Psalms.

My son, walk not thou in the way with sinners, thy foot from their path. Proverbs.

Not from the holy one of heav'n Refrain'd his tongue. Milton.

Refrain'd, his wrath shall now refrain, To thwart the fury of the gods in vain. Pope.

REFRAIN. v. w. To forbear; to abstain; to spare.

REF

In what place, or upon what consideration soever it be, they do it, were it in their own opinion of no force being done, they would undoubtedly refrain to do it. Hooker.

For my name's sake will I defer mine anger, and refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off. Isaiah.

That they fed not on flesh, at least the faithful party before the flood, may become more probable, because they refrained therefrom some time after. Brown.

REFRANGIBILITY. n. f. [from refrangible.]

Refrangibility of the rays of light, is their disposition to be refracted or turned out of their way, in passing out of one transparent body or medium into another. Newton.

REFRANGIBLE. adj. [re and frango, Latin.]

As some rays are more refrangible than others; that is, are more turn'd out of their course, in passing from one medium to another, it follows, that after such refraction, they will be separated, and their distinct colour observed. Lake.

REFRACTION. n. f. [re and frango, Lat.]

The act of refracting.

To REFRESH. v. a. [refraischer, French; refrigero, Latin.]

1. To recreate; to relieve after pain, fatigue, or want.

Service shall with steel'd sinews toil; And labour shall refresh it with hope. Shaksp.

REFRESHMENT. n. f. [from refresh.]

1. Relief after pain, want, or fatigue.

2. That which gives relief; as food, rest.

He was full of agony and horror upon the approach of a dismal death, and so had most need of the refreshments of society, and the friendly attentions of his disciples. South.

Such honest refreshments and comforts of life, our christian liberty has made it lawful for us to use. Spratt.

REFRET. n. f. The burden of a song. Ditt.

REFRIGERANT. adj. [refrigerant, Fr. from refrigerate.] Cooling; mitigating heat.

In the cure of gangrenes, you must beware of dry heat, and resort to things that are refrigerant, with inward warmth and virtue of cherishing. Bacon.

If it arise from any external cause, apply refrigerants, without any preceding evacuation. Weyman.

To REFRIGERATE. v. a. [refrigero, re and frigus, Latin.] To cool.

The great breezes, which the motion of the air in great circles, such as the gulle of the world produceth, do refrigerate; and therefore in those parts noon is nothing so hot, when the breezes are great, as about ten of the clock in the forenoon. Bacon.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinably, or somewhat equinozically, though in a lesser degree, they discover some verticity. Brown.

REFRIGERATION. n. f. [refrigeratio, Lat. refrigeration, French.] The act of cooling; the state of being cooled.

REF

Divine deities; the cause may be the refrigeration of the tongue, whereby it is kept as more. Bacon. If the more refrigeration of the air would fit it for breathing, this might be somewhat helped with bellows. Wilkins.

REFRIGERATIVE. adj. [refrigerativus, French; refrigeratorius, Latin.] Cooling; having the power to cool.

REFRIGERATORY. n. f.

1. That part of a distilling vessel that is placed about the head of a still, and filled with water to cool the condensing vapours; but this is now generally done by a worm or spiral pipe, turning through a tub of cold water. Quincy.

2. Any thing internally cooling.

A delicate wine and a durable refrigeratory. Mortimer.

REFRIGERIUM. n. f. [Latin] Cool refreshment; refrigeration.

It must be acknowledged, the ancients have talked much of annual refrigeriums, respites, or intervals of punishment to the damned; as particularly on the festivals. South.

REFT. part. pret. of reate.

1. Deprived; taken away. Obsolete.

Thus we well left, he better reft,

In heaven to take his place,

That by like life and death, at last,

We may obtain like grace. Ascham.

I, in a desperate bay of death,

I like a poor bark, of sails and tackling reft,

Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bottom. Shakspere.

Another ship had seiz'd on us,

And would have reft the fibres of their pray. Shak.

Our dying hero, from the continent

Ravish'd whole towns, and forts from Spaniards reft,

2. [part. of reate.] Took away. Obsolete.

So twist them both, they not a hankin left,

And when lambs lull'd, the old deeps lives they reft. Spenser.

About his shoulders broad he threw

An airy hide of some wild beast, whom he

In savage toil by adventure flew,

And reft the spoil his ornament to be. Spenser.

REFUGE. n. f. [refuge, French; refugium, Latin.]

1. Shelter from any danger or distress; protection.

Rock, dens, and caves; but I in none of these

Find place of refuge. Milton.

The young vipers suppos'd to break through the belly of the dam, will, upon any fright, for protection run into it; nor till the old one receives them in at her mouth, which way, the fright being past, they will return again, which is a peculiar way of refuge. Brown.

Those who take refuge in a multitude, have an Army com'd to answer for. Atterbury.

2. That which gives shelter or protection.

The Lord will be a refuge for the oppressed; a refuge in times of trouble. Psalms.

They shall be your refuge from the avenger of blood.

things, besides the present subject of our meditation. Watts.

REGENCY, n. f. [from regent.]

1. Authority; government.

As Christ took manhood, that by it he might be capable of death, whereunto he humbleth himself;
so because manhood is the proper subject of compassion and feeling pity, which maketh the scepter of Christ's regency even in the kingdom of heaven equal to. Hooker.

Men have knowledge and strength to fit them for action: women affection, for their better compliance; and herewith beauty to compensate their inflection, by giving them an equivalent regency over men. Grew.

2. Vicarious government.

This great minister, finding the regency shaken by the action of so many great ones within, and aided by the terror of the Spanish greatness without, durst begin a war. Temple.

To REGENERATE, v. a. [regenero,
Latin.]

1. To reproduce; to produce anew.

About the sun of this east of Delmond, who lost his head, were restored to the earldom; yet could not the king's grace regenerate obedience in that degenerate house, but it grew rather more wild.
Davies.

Through all the soil a genial ferment spreads,
Regenerates the plants, and new adorns the meads Blackmore.

An alkali, poured to that which is mixed with an acid, raises an effervescence, at the cessation of which, the salts, of which the acid is composed, will be regenerated. Arbutnot.

2. To make to be born anew; to renew by
Vol. II.

REG

change of carnal nature to a christian life.

No sooner was a convert initiated, but by an easy figure he became a new man, and both acted and looked upon himself as one regenerated, and born a second time into another state of existence. Addison.

REGENERATE, adj. [regeneratus, Latin.]

Thou! the earthly author of my blood,
Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate,
Doth with a twofold vigour lit me up
To reach at victory. Shakespeare.

2. Born anew by grace to a christian life.

For from the mercy-seat above,
Prevenient grace descending, had remov'd
The stony from their hearts, and made new flesh Regenerate grow instead. Milton.

If you fulfil this resolution, though you fall sometimes by infirmity; nay, though you should fall into some greater act, even of deliberate sin, which you presently retract by confession and amendment, you are nevertheless in a regenerate estate, you live the life of a christian here, and shall inherit the reward that is promised to such in a glorious immortality hereafter. Wake.

REGENERATENESS, n. f. [from regenerate.]

The state of being regenerate.

REGENERATION, n. f. [regeneration, Fr.]

What gave me ease, and how I slept? Swift.

REGIMENT, n. f. [regiment, old French.]

1. Established government; polity; mode of rule. Not in use.

We all make complaint of the iniquity of our times, not unjustly, for the days are evil; but compare them with those times wherein there were no civil societies, with those times wherein there was as yet no manner of publick regiment established, and we have surely good cause to think, that God hath blessed us exceedingly. Hooker.

The corruption of our nature being presupposed, we may not deny, but that the law of nature doth now require of necessity some kind of regiment.

They utterly damn their own confessorian regi- ment, for the same can neither be proved by any literal texts of holy scripture, nor yet by necessary inference out of scripture. White.

All being forced unto fluent consistencies, naturally regress unto their former solidities. Brown.

REGRESSION. n. f. [regressus, Lat.]

The act of returning or going back.

To desire there were no God, were plainly to unwith their own being, which must needs be annihilated in the subtraction of that essence, which substantially supporteth them, and restrains from regression into nothing. Brown.

REGRET. n. f. [regret, Fr. regretto, Italian.]

1. Vexation at something past; bitterness of reflection.

I never have any touch of conscience with greater regret. King Charles.

A passionate regret at sin, a grief and sadness at its memory, enters us into God's roll of mourners. Decay of Piety.

Though sin offers itself in never so pleasing a dress,

Yet the remorse and inward regrets of the soul, upon the communion of it, infinitely overbalance those faint gratifications it affords the senses. South.

2. Grief; sorrow.

Never any prince expressed a more lively regret for the loss of a servant, than his majesty did for this great man; in all offices of grace towards his servants, and in a wonderful solicitous care for the payment of his debts. Clarendon.

That freedom, which all sorrows claim,

She does for thy content resign; Her piety itself would blame,

If her regrets should waken thine. Prior.

3. Dislike; aversion. Not proper.

Is it a virtue to have some ineffective regrets to damnation, and such a virtue too, as shall balance all our vices? Decay of Piety.

To REGRET. v. a. [regretter, Fr. from the noun.]

Stoop, and let your knee against my foot;

And in regardon of that duty done,

I gird thee with the valiant sword of York. Shakspeare.

To REGUARDON. v. a. [from the noun.]

To reward. The verb and noun are both obsolete.

Long since we were resolv'd of your truth,

Your faithful service and your toil in war;

Yet never have you tasted your reward,

Or been reguardon'd with so much as thanks. Shakspeare.

REGULAR. adj. [regulier, Fr. regularis, Latin.]

1. Agreeable to rule; consistent with the mode prescribed.

The common cant of critics is, that though the lines are good, it is not a regular piece. Guardian.

The ways of heav'n are dark and intricate;

Puzzled in mazes, and perplex'd with errors,

Our understanding traces them in vain,

Lost and bewild'rd in the fruitless search; Pope.

Not less with how much art the windings run,

Nor where the regular confusion ends. Addison.

So when we view some well-proportion'd dome,

No monstrous height or breadth or length appear;

The whole at once is bold and regular. Pope.

2. Governed by strict regulations.

So just thy skill, to regular my rage. Pope.

RELICK. n. f. [reliquie, Lat. relique, Fr.]

1. That which remains; that which is left after the loss or decay of the rest. It is generally used in the plural.

Up dreary dame of darkness's queen,

Go gather up the relics of thy race,

Or else go thou aveng'd

Shall we go to the relics of this town?

The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy

Of her creature's faith are bound to Diomed.

2. It is often taken for the body deserted by the soul.

What needs my Shakespear for his honour'd labour,
The labour of an age in piled stones?
Or that his hallow'd relics should be hid
Under a starry-pointed pyramid? Milton.
In peace, ye shades of our great grandfathers, rest,
Eternal spring, and rising flow'rs adorn
The relics of each venerable urn. Dryden.
Shall our relics second birth receive?
Sleep we to wake, and only die to live? Prior.
Thy relics, Rowe, to this last firm we trust,
And sacred place by Dryden's awful dusk;
Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes. Pope.
3. That which is kept in memory of another, with a kind of religious veneration.
Cows butter'd into rags, then reliques leaves
The sport of winds. Milton.
This church is very rich in reliques; among the rest, they show a fragment of Thomas à Becket, as indeed there are very few treasures of reliques in Italy, that have not a tooth or a bone of this saint.

RELICKLY. adv. [from reliques.] In the manner of reliques. A word not used, nor elegantly formed.

Thirty wench scrapes kitchen fluff,
And barreling the droppings and the moff
Of waning candles, which in thirty year
Relickly kept, perhaps buys wedding cheer. Daunce.
RELIER. n. f. [relache, old French; relictus, Latin.] A widow; a wife desolate by the death of her husband.

If the fathers and husbands were of the household of faith, then certainly their relicts and children pain or sorrow.

Thoughts in my unquiet breast are risen,
Tending to some relief of our extremes. Milton.

2. That which frees from pain or sorrow.
He found his degraded present would be a relief, and when he thought it an impertinence to consider what it could be called besides. Fell.
So should we make our death a glad relief
From future shame. Deighton.

Nor dar'd I to presume, that pres'd with grief,
My slight should urge you to this due relief,
Stay, stay your steps. Dryden.

3. Dismission of a sentinel from his post.
For this relief, much thanks; 'tis bitter cold,
And I am sick at heart. Shakespeare.

4. [relevium, law Lat.] Legal remedy of wrongs.

5. The prominence of a figure in stone or metal; the seeming prominence of a picture.

The figures of many ancient coins rise up in a much more beautiful relief than those of the modern; the face sinking by degrees in the several declensions of the empire, till about Constantine's time, it lies almost even with the surface of the medal. Adrian.

Not with such majesty, such bold relief,
The forms august of kings, or conqu'ring chief,
E'er swell'd on marble, as in verse have thine,
In polish'd verse, the manners, and the mind. Pope.

6. The exposure of any thing, by the proximity of something different.

RELIEVABLE. adj. [from relieve.] Capable of relief.

Neither can they, as to reparation, hold plea of things, wherein the party is relievable by common law. Hale.

From thy groving store,
Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor;
A pittance of my hand will let him free. Dryden.

3. To set a sentinel at rest, by placing another on his post.

Honest soldier, who hath relieved you?
Bernardo has my place, give you good night. Shakespeare.

Relieve the centurians that have watch'd all night,
Dryden.

4. To right by law.

5. To recommend by the interposition of something dissimilar.

As the great lamp of day,
Through different regions does his course pursue,
And leaves one world but to revive a new;
While, by a pleasing change, the queen of night
Relieves his lustre with a milder light. Stepney.

Since the inculcating precept upon precept will prove ineffectual, the poet must not encumber his poem with too much business; but sometimes relieve the subject with a moral reflection. Addison.

6. To support; to assist; to recommend to attention.

Parables, or like relations, alternately relieve each other; when neither will pass stander, yet are they plausible together. Brown.

RELIEVER. n. f. [from relieve.] One that relieves.

He is the protector of his weakness, and the reliever of his want. Rogers.

RELIEVO. n. f. [Italian.] The prominence of a figure or picture.

A convex mirror makes the objects in the middle come out from the superficies, the painter must do so in respect of the lights and shadows of his figures, to give them more relievo and more firmness.
Dryden.

TO RELIGHT. v. a. [re and light.] To light anew.

His power can heal me, and relight my eye. Pope.

RELIGION. n. f. [religion, Fr. religio,
Latin.]

1. Virtue, as founded upon reverence of God, and expectation of future rewards and punishments.

He that is void of fear, may soon be just,
And no religion binds men to be traitors. B. Jonf.
One spoke much of right and wrong,
Of justice, of religion, truth, and peace
And judgment from above. Milton.

By religion, I mean that general habit of reverence towards the divine nature, whereby we are enabled and inclined to worship and serve God after such a manner as we conceive most agreeable to his will, to as to procure his favour and blessing. With.

If we consider it as directed against God, it is a breach of religion; if as to men, it is an offence against morality. South.

By her inform'd, we best religion learn,
Its glorious object by her aid discern. Blackmore.

Religion or virtue, in a large sense, includes duty to God and our neighbour; but in a proper sense, virtue signifies duty towards men, and religion duty to God. Watts.

I never once in my life considered, whether I was living as the laws of religion direct, or whether my way of life was such, as would procure me the mercy of God at this hour. Law.

2. A system of divine faith and worship, as opposite to others.

The image of a brute, adorn'd
With gay religions, full of pomp and gold. Milton.
The christian religion, rightly understood, is the deepest and choicest piece of philosophy that is.

The doctrine of the gospel proposes to men such glorious rewards and such terrible punishments as no religion ever did, and gives us far greater assurance of their reality and certainty than ever the world had. Tillotson.

RELIGIONIST. n. f. [from religion.] A bigot to any religious persuasion.

The lawfulness of taking oaths may be revealed to the quakers, who then will stand upon as good a foot for preferment as any other subject; under such a motley administration, what pullings and hawlings, what a zeal and bias there will be in each religionist to advance his own tribe, and depress the others. Day.

RELIGIOUS. adj. [religieux, Fr. religiosus,
Latin.]

1. Pious; disposed to the duties of religion.
It is a matter of sound consequence, that the duties are by to much the better performed, as much the men are more religious, i. e. as whole lines the same proceed. Haw.

When holy and devout religious christians Are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw them from thence; Shakspeare.

So sweet is zealous contemplation
Their lives

Religious titled them the sons of God. Miles.

2. Touching religion.

He God doth late and early pray,
More of his grace than gifts to lend,
And entertains the harmless day
With a religious bus or friend. Watts.

3. Among the Romanists, bound by the vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience.

Certain hyars and religious men were more with some zeal, to draw the people to the christianity. Day.

There are vast numbers of ecclesiastics, both lar and religious. Miles.

What the protestants would call a fanatic, is the Roman church a religious of such an order, an English merchant in Lisbon, after some disappointments in the world, retired to the conclusion. Adrian.

4. Exact; strict.

5. Appropriated to strict observance of holy duties.

1. To forsake; to abandon; to leave; to desert.

The habitation there was utterly relinquish'd. Day.

The English colonies grew poor and weak, because the English lords grew rich and mighty, and placed Irish tenants upon the lands relinquish'd
the English. Day.

2. To quit; to release; to give up.

The ground of God's sole property in any thing, is the return of it made by man to God, by which not he relinquishes and delivers back to God right to the use of that thing, which before had been freely granted him by God. See.

3. To forbear; to depart from.

In case it may be proved, that amongst the number of rites and orders common unto both are particulars, the use whereof is utterly un-ful, in regard of some special bad and quality; there is no doubt but we ought to quit such rites and orders, what freedom
we have to retain the other still. Haw.

RELINQUISHMENT. n. f. [from relinquish.]

The act of forsaking.
Government or ceremonies, or whatsoever it be, which is popish, away with it: this is the thing they require in us, the utter relinquishment of all it is popish. Hooker.

That natural tenderness of conscience, which must first create in the soul a sense of sin, and from thence produce a sorrow for it, and at length cause a relinquishment of it, is took away by a customary repeated course of sinning. South.

RELISH. n. f. [from relecher, French; to lick again. Mingwee. Skinner.]

Taste; the effect of any thing on the palate: it is commonly used of a pleasing taste.

Under sharp, sweet, and sour, are abundance of immediate peculiar relishes or tastes, which experienced palates can easily discern. Boyle.

It what you have heard, shall remain in you, ye shall continue in the Son. 1 John.

5. To be left as not comprised.
That a father may have some power over his children, is easily granted; but that an elder brother has so over his brethren, remains to be proved. Locke.

6. To continue in a place.
To REMAIN. v. a. To await; to be left to.

Such end had the kid, for he would weaned be
Of envy, coloured with simplicity;
And such end, pride, does all them remain
That of such falser friendship shall be slain. Spenser.

With a broken staff
I'll ruse such children on thy clatter'd iron,
Which long shall not withhold me from thy head,
That in a little time, while both remain thee,
Thou oft shalt with thyself at Gath to boast,
But never shalt see Gath. Milton.

If thence he tempe, what remains him less Than unknown dangers? Milton.

The elder conquest now
Remains thee, asked by this host of friends, Back on thy toes more glorious to return. Milton.

REMAIN. n. f. [from the verb.]

gelical obedience. Hammond
Mahomet's crescent by our fowls encreas'd, Blasphem'd the leav'd remainders of the East. Denham
Could base ingratitude have made any one so diabolical, had not cruelty came in as a friend to its assistance, and cleared the villain's breast of all remainders of humanity? South
There are two restraints which God hath put upon human nature, shame and fear; shame is the weaker, and hath place only in those in whom there are some remainders of virtue. Tillotson
What madness moves you, matrons, to destroy
The last remainders of unhappy Troy? Dryden
If he, to whom ten talents were committed, has squandered away five, he is concerned to make a double improvement of the remainder. Rogers
If these decoctions be repeated till the water comes off clear, the remainder yields no salt. Arbutnot
Of six millions raised every year for the service of the publick, one third is intercepted through the several subordinations of artful men in office, before the remainder is applied to the proper use. Swift representation; to show reasons on any side in strong terms.

REMORA, n. f. [Latin.]

1. A let or obstacle.

2. A fish or a kind of worm that sticks to ships, and retards their passage through the water.

Of fishes you shall find in arms the whale, herring, roach, and remora. Pemham.

The remora is about three quarters of a yard long; his body before three inches and a half over, thence tapering to the tail end, his mouth two inches and a half over; his chops ending angular-ly; the nether a little broader, and produced forward near an inch; his lips rough with a great number of little prickles. Green.

TO REMORSE, v. n. [from remoror, Lat.] To hinder; to delay. Dick.

REM

REMORSE, n. f. [from remorsus, Latin.]

1. Pain of guilt.
Not that he believed they could be refrained from that impulse but by any remorse of conscience, or that they had not wickedness enough to delude and overcome it. Chapman.

2. Tenderness; pity; sympathetick sorrow.

Many little effusions of their own lives, yet, for remorse of their wives and children, would be withheld. Spenser.

Shylock, then lead off this factor of thy justice
To the full hour of act, and then his thought.
Thou'lt see thy mercy, and remorse more humble;
Thou'lt see thy justice apparent cruelty. Shakespeare.

The rogues indicted me into the river, with a little remorse as they would have drowned a batch of blind puppies. Shakespeare.

Curse on th' unpaid young prince, whom tears can draw
To no remorse; who rules by lion's law. Dryden.

REMORSEFUL, adj. [from remorse and full.]

1. Tender; compassionate.
O Eglamour, think not I flatter, Valiant and wise, remorseful, well accomplished. Shakespeare.

Love, that comes too late,
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carved,
To the great tender turns a tower of offence. Shakespeare.

The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day
Is crept into the bottom of the sea. Shakespeare.

Of thunder heard remote. Milton.

3. Removed far off; placed not near.

The arch-chymick fun, so far from us remote,
Produces with terrestrial humours mixed
Here in the dark to many precious things. Milton.

Remote from men with God he pass'd his days,
Pray'r all his business, all his pleasure, praise. Paradise.

In quiet shades, content with rural sports,
Give me a life, remote from guilty courts. Gravelle.

4. Foreign.

5. Distant; not closely connected.

An undivided transference from the effect to the remote cause. Gloucester.

Syllogism leaves not to furnish the mind with intermediate ideas, that shew the connection of remote ones. Locke.

6. Alien; not agreeing.

All those propositions, how remote forever from reason, are to sacred, that men will sooner part with their lives, than suffer themselves to doubt of them. Locke.

7. Abstracted.

Wherever the mind places itself by any thought, either amongst, or remote from all bodies, it can,
in this uniform idea of space, no where find any boundary. Locke.

REMOVEDLY, adv. [from remote.] Not nearly; at a distance.

It is commonly opined, that the earth was thinly inhabited, at least not removedly planted before the flood. Brown.

Two lines in Mercurius and Lausus are indeed removedly allied to Virgil's sense, but too like the tenderness of Ovid. Dryden.

REM

How, while the fainting Dutch remotely lie,
And the laud Eugene's iron troops retire,
In the silent amidst a slaughter'd pile,
High on the mound he dy'd. South.

REMOVEDNESS, n. f. [from remote.] State of being remote; distance; not nearness.

The joys of heaven are like the bliss, which is reason of our remoteness; but extremely near.

Titian employed by own and earthly colouring, the face part, and is reserved by the artist's remote style, and the back part of his hands is by the artist's.

If the greatest part of bodies escape
by their remoteness, others are not so easily by their remoteness.

The oblations generally arise from the minds of the customs, persons, and things he to.

REMOVAL, n. f. [from removal, Latin.]
The act of removing; the state of being removed to distance.

All this lately were removal, and the dead. Shakespeare.

The consequent strictly taken, may be attention, in reference to antecedent or consequence; as to conclude from the position of the antecedent unto the position of the consequent, or from the removal of the consequent to the position of the antecedent. Locke.

REMOVABLE, adj. [from removal.] Such as may be removed.

The Irish bishops have their clergy in such a position, that they dare not complain of their knowing their own incapacity, and that they are therefore removable at their bishop's will, yet what pleases him. Spenser.

In such a chapel, such estate is removable at the pleasure of the rector of the mother church.

REMOVAL, n. f. [from removal.]

1. The act of putting out of any place.
By which removal of one extremity with another, the world, seeking to procure a remedy, had produced a mere exchange of the evil before him.

2. The act of putting away.

The removal of such a disease is not to be interrupted by active remedies, no more than a disease in the flesh is to be taken away by violence. Arbuthnot.

3. Dismissal from a post.

If the removal of these persons from their posts has produced such popular commotions, the continuance of them might have produced something more fatal. Addison.

Whether his removal was caused by his own fears or other men's artifices, supposing the throne to be vacant, the body of the people was left at liberty to chuse what form of government they pleased. South.

4. The state of being removed.

The fitting still of a paralytic, whilst he presents it to a removal, is voluntary. Locke.

TO REMOVE, v. a. [from removere, Lat. re- moveo, French.]

1. To put from its place; to take or put away.

Good God remove
The means that makes us strangers! Shakespeare.

He removeth away the speech of the fool, and taketh away the understanding of the aged.

So would he have removed thee out of first into a broad place.

He longer in this paradise to dwell
Permits not; to remove thee I am come.
And send thee from the garden forth to till
The ground. Spenser.

Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice.

1. Assembly; meeting appointed.

2. A sign that draws men together.

The philosophers stone and a holy war are but the rendezvous of cracked brains, that wear their feather in their head instead of their hat.

3. Place appointed for assembly.

A commander of many ships should rather keep his fleet together than have it fevered far and wide;
for the attendance of meeting them again at the next rendezvous would consume time and victual.

The king appointed his whole army to be drawn together to a rendezvous at Marlborough.

This was the general rendezvous which they all got to, and, now being more and more with that only ship, they tucked it all up.

TO RENDEZVOUS, v. n. [from the noun.]

To meet at a place appointed.

These were the renowned of the congregated princes of the tribes, heads of thousands.

That thrice renowned and learned Frenchman, finding Petrarch's tomb without any inscription wrote one himself; saying, shame it was, that I who sung his mistress's praise seven years before her death, should twelve years want an epitaph.

The rest were long to tell, though far renown'd.

Of all the cities in Roman lands,
The chrest and most renown'd Ravenna lands,
Adorn'd in ancient times with arms and arts.

An isle renown'd for steel and unexhausted mines.

RENT, n. f. [from rend.] A break; a laceration.

This council made a schism and rent from the most ancient and purest churches which lived before them.

Thou viper
Hast cancell'd kindred, made a rent in nature,
And through her holy bowels gnaw'd thy way.

Through thy own blood to empire.

He who fees this vast rent in to high a rock, the convex parts of one side exactly tally with the concave of the other, must be satisfied, that it was the effect of an earthquake.

That from the prime creation e'er the trans Shok.

TO REPLENISH. v. n. To recover the former fullness. Not in use.

The humours in men's bodies encrease and decrease as the moon doth; and the restore purge some days after the full, for then the humours will not return to full.
Bacon.

REPLET. adj. [replet, French; repletus, Latin.] Full; completely filled; filled to exuberance.

The world's large tongue

Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks;
Full of comparisons and wounding flouts. Shaksp.

This mortification, it is over high a degree, is less better than the corrosion of poison; as sometimes in autumn, it is given to bodies not replete with humours; for where humours abound, the humours have the parts.
Bacon.

His words, replete with guile,

Into her heart too early entrance won. Milton.

In a dog, out of whose eye, being wounded, the aqueous humour did copiously flow, yet in six hours the bulb of the eye was again replete with its humour, without the application of any medicines.
Bacon.

REPLETION. n. f. [repletion, French.]
The state of being over full.

The tree had too much repletion, and was oppressed with its own sap; for repletion is an enemy to generation.
Bacon.

REP

All dreams

Are from repletion and complexion bred;
From rising fumes of undigested food. Dryden.
Thrift and hunger may be fairly said;
But this repletion is to love decay'd. Dryden.

The action of the stomach is totally stopped by too great repletion.
Arbuthnot.

fore offered, concerning the transplantation of Ulysses to Sparta. Bacon.

TO REPLIANT. v. n. [repliquer, Fr.] To answer; to make a return to an answer.

O man! who art thou that repliest against God?
Romans.

Would we ascend higher to the rest of their lewd persons, we should find what reason Caliban's pander had to reply upon the cardinal, who blamed him for putting a little too much colour into St.
Peter and Paul's faces—that it was true in their lifetime they were pale mortified men, but that since they were grown ruddy, by blushing, at the sins of their successors. Atterbury.

TO REPLY. v. a. To return for an answer.

Perplex'd

The tempter flood, nor had what to reply. Milton.

His trembling tongue invoke'd his guide;
With his last voice Eurydice he cry'd:
Fury dice the rocks and river banks repli'd. Dryden.

REPLY. n. f. [replique, French.] Answer; return to an answer.

But now return,

And with then Iant reply this answer join. Shaksp.
If I sent him word, it was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself; if again, it was not well cut, this is called the reply churlish.

One rises up to make replies to establish or con-fute what has been offered on each side of the question. Watts.

To whom with sighs, Ulysses gave reply,
Ah, why ill-tuning pastoral must I try? Pope.

REPLYER. n. f. [from reply.] He that answers; he that makes a return to an answer.

At an act of the commencement, the answerer gave for his question, that an aristocracy was better than a monarchy: the replier did tax him, that, being a private bred man, he would give a question of state: the answerer said, that the replier did much wrong the privilege of scholars, who would be much frightened if they could give questions of nothing, but such times when they are practised; and added, we have heard yourself dispute of virtue, which no man will try you put much in practice. Bacon.

TO REPOLISH. v. a. [repolir, Fr. re and polir.] To polish again.

A hundred clock is polished hand,

One that gives an account.

There the appar'd, or my reporter devis'd will for her. Shakspere.

Rumours were rate of great diffidence among the nobility, for this cause the Lords, assemble'd, gave order to apprehend the reporters of these rumours. Howard.

If I had known a thing concealed, I should never be the reporter of it. Pope.

REPORTINGLY. adv. [from reporting.]
By common fame.

Others say thou dost deserve, and I Believe it better than reportingly. Shakspere.

REPOSAL. n. f. [from repose.] The act of repoling.

Doth thou think,

If I would stand a minute there, would the repusal
Of any truth, virtue, or worth in thee
Make thy words faith'd? Shakspere.

TO REPOSE. v. a. [repono, Latin.]

1. To lay to rest.
Rome's sacred champion, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps;
Here links no treason, here no envy twines,
Have ye chosen this place?

After the toil of battle, to repose
Your wearied virtue? Milton.

2. To place as in confidence or trust: with on O. M.

I repose upon your management, what is dearest to me, my fame. Dryden.

That pious was conscious of his own integrity in the service of God, and relied on this as a foundation for that trust he reposed in him, to deliver him out of his distresses. Rogers.

3. To lodge; to lay up.
Pebbles, reposed in the cloths amongst the castle, being not so durable, and more bulky, are less behind. Bacon.

TO REPOSE. v. n. [reposer, French.]

Within a basket I reposed; when I found
I could not sleep in heap, and found I had had from heaven, a sleep into my eye. Shakspere.

2. To rest in confidence: with on.
And, for the ways are dangerous to pass,
I do desire thy worthy company,
Upon whose faith and honour I rely. Shakespeare.
REPOSE. n. f. [repona, French.]
1. Sleep; rest; quiet.
Merciful powers!
Restrain in me the curled thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakespeare.
The hour
Of night, and of all things now retir'd to rest,
Mind us of like repose. Milton.
I all the fix'd long day
Consume in meditation deep recluse
From human converse; nor a shut of eye
Enjoy repose. Philips.
2. Cude of rest.
After great lights must be great shadows, which we call repose; because in reality the light would be tired, if attracted by a continuity of glittering objects. Dryden.
REPOSEDNESS. n. f. [from reposed.] State of being at rest.
To REPOSEITE. v. a. [repositus, Latin.]
To lay up; to lodge as in a place of safety.

themselves also therein, because such security is wanting, their lives being thought. Deham.
REPOSITION. n. f. [from reposita.] The act of replacing.
Being taught in the reposition of the bone, take care to keep it to by deligation. Weyman.
REPOSITORY. n. f. [repositoire, French; repositorium, Latin.] A place where any thing is safely laid up.
The mind of man not being capable of having many ideas under view at once, it was necessary to have a repository to lay up those ideas. Locke.
He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them, to us without the appearance of irretrievable confusion, but with respect to his own knowledge into the most regular and methodical repositories. Rogers.
To REPOSESS. v. a. [re and posses.] To possess again.
How comes it now, that almost all that realm is repossessed of them? Speyer.
Her suit is now to repossess those lands,
Which we in justice cannot well deny. Shakespeare.
Nor shall any father repossess the land,
The father's fortune never to return. Pope.
To REPREHEND. v. a. [reprehendo,
Latin.]
1. To reprove; to chide.
All as before his fight, whole presence to offend with any the least untimely words, we would be sure as both as they, who most reprehend or decide that we do. Hooker.
Pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed. Shakespeare.
They like dumb horses snarl'd,
Which when I saw, I reprehended them;
And ask'd the mayor, what meant this wilful silence? Shakespeare.
2. To blame; to censure.
He could not reprehend the fight, so many strew'd
the ground. Chapman.
I nor advise, nor reprehend the choice Of Marley-hill. Philips.

that was not rich, for that he gave six crowns for a small fish, answered, Why, what would you have given? the other said, Some twelve pence: Antippos said again, and six crowns is no more with me.
Bacon.
REPREHENDER. n. f. [from reprehend.]
Blamer; censurer.

Those severest reproachers of things, established by publick authority, are always consistent and bold-spoken men; but their confidence for the most part riseth from too much credit given to their own wits, for which cause they are seldom free from errors. Hooker.
REPREHENSIBLE. adj. [reprehensibilis, French; reprehensus, Latin.] Blamable; culpable: censurable.

the likeness of something.
When it is blessed, some believe it to be the natural body of Christ, others, the beilings of Christ, his passion in representation, and his grace in real exhibition. Tucker.
We have met with some, whose realms made their representations. Locke.
To REPRESS. v. a. [repressus, Latin; reprimer, French.] To crush; to put down; to subdue.
Discontents and ill blood having used always to repress and appease in person, he was both they should find him beyond sea. Bacon.
Some, taking dangers to be the only remedy against dangers, endeavoured to set up the sedition again; but they were speedily repressed, and thereby the sedition suppressed wholly. Hayward.
Such kings
Favour the innocent, repress the bold,
And, while they flourish, make an age of gold.
Waller.
How can I
Repress the horror of my thoughts, which fly
The sad remembrance? Shakespeare.
Thus long succeeding critics have justly reprim'd,
Lacine reprim'd, and useful laws ordain'd;
Learning and Rome alike in empire grew. Pope.
REPRESS. n. f. [from the verb.] Repression; act of crushing. Not in use.
Loud outcries of injury, when they tend to the repress of it, is a liberty rather assumed by rage and impatience, than authorized by justice.
Government of the Tongue.

Unless her prayers, whom heav'n delights to hear,
And loves to grant, reprive from the wrath
Of greatest justice. Shakespeare.
Company, though it may reprive a man from his melancholy, yet cannot secure him from his conscience. South.
Having been condemned for his part in the late rebellion, his majesty had been pleased to reprive him, with several of his friends, in order to give them their lives. Amory.
He reprives the sinner from time to time, and continues and heaps on him the favours of his providence, in hopes that, by an act of clemency so undeserved, he may prevail on his gratitude and repentance. Rogers.
REPRIVE. n. f. [from the verb.] Respite after sentence of death.
In his reprive he may be so fitted,
That his soul sicken not. Shakespeare.
I hope it is some pardon or reprive
For Claudio. Shakespeare.

TO REPU'DIATE. v. a. [repudio, Latin; repudier, Fr.] To divorce; to reject; to put away.

Let not those, that have repudiated the more inviting sins, flow themselves plundered and bewitched by this. Government of the Tongue.

Here is a notorious instance of the folly of the athletes, that while they repudiate all title to the kingdom of heaven, merely for the present pleasure of body, and their boasted tranquillity of mind, besides the extreme madness in running such a desperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that very pleasure and tranquillity they seek for. Bentley.

REPUDIATION. n. f. [repudiation, Fr. from repudiate.] Divorce; rejection.

It was allowed by the Athenians, only in case of repudiation of a wife. Arbuthnot.

REPUGNANCE. n. f. [repugnance, Fr. from repugnare.]

1. Inconsistency; contrariety.

But where difference is without repugnance, that which hath been can be no prejudice to that which is. Hobbes.

It is no assault to omnipotence, it, by reason of the formal incapacity and repugnance of the thing, we aver that the world could not have been made from all eternity. Bentley.

2. Reluctance; resistance.

Why do foud men expose themselves to battle,
And let the loss quietly cut their throats,
Without repugnance? Shakespeare.

3. Struggle of opposite passions.

Thus did the passions act without any of their present jars, combats, or repugnances, all moving with the beauty of uniformity and the fulness of compulsion. South.

4. Aversion; unwillingness.

That which causes us to loathe most of our time, is the repugnance which we naturally have to labour. Dryden.

REPUGNANT. adj. [repugnant, Fr. repugnans, Lat.]

1. Disobedient; not obsequious.

His antique sword,
Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls,
Repugnant to command. Shakespeare.

2. Contrary; opposite; inconsistent: with to, sometimes with.

There is no breach of a divine law, but is more or less repugnant unto the will of the law-giver, God himself. Perkins.

Why I reject the other conjectures, is, because they have not due warrant from observation, but are clearly repugnant thereto. Woodward.

Your way is to wrest and strain some principles maintained both by them and me, to a sense repugnant with their other known doctrines. Waterland.

REPUGNANTLY. adv. [from repugnant.] Contradictorily.

They speak not repugnantly thereto. Brown

Man complete to have discover'd and repulsed,
Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend. Milton.

REPULSION. n. f. [repulsio, Lat.] The act or power of driving off from itself.

Air has some degree of tenacity, whereby the parts attract one another; at the same time, by their elasticity, the particles of air have a power of repulsion or flying off from one another. Arbuthnot.

REPULSIVE. adj. [from repulse.] Driving off; having the power to beat back or drive off.

The parts of the salt or vitriol recede from one another, and endeavour to expand themselves, and get as far asunder as the quantity of water, in which they float, will allow; and does not this endeavour imply, that they have a repulsive force by which they fly from one another, or that they attract the water more strongly than one another? Newton.

TO REPU'CHASE. v. a. [re and purchase.] To buy again.

Once more we sit on England's royal throne,
Repurchas'd with the blood of enemies;
What valiant for-men, like to autumn's corn,
Have we mow'd down in top of all their pride? Shakespeare.

If the son alien those lands, and repurchase them again in fee, the rules of descents are to be observed, as if he were the original purchaser. Hale.

REPUTABLE. adj. [from repute.] Honourable; not infamous.

If ever any vice shall become reputable, and be gloried in as a mark of greatness, what can we then expect from the man of honour, but to signalize himself? Rogers.

In the article of danger it is as reputable to elude an enemy as defeat one. Broom.

REPUTABLENESS. n. f. [from reputable.] The quality of a thing of good repute.

REPUTABLY. adv. [from reputable.] Without discredit.

To many such worthy magistrates, who have thus reputably filled the chief seats of power in this great city, I am now addressing my discourse. Atterbury.

REPUTATION. n. f. [reputation, Fr. from repute.]

1. Character of good or bad.

Perley, upon the lake of Geneva, has the reputation of being extremely poor and beggarly. Addison.

2. Credit; honour.

Reputation is an idle and most false imposition oft got without merit, and lost without deserving; you have lost no reputation at all, unless you repute yourself such a loser. Shakespeare.

A third interprets motions, looks, and eyes;
At ev'ry word a reputation dies. Pop.

TO REPUTE. v. a. [reputo, Lat. reputo, Fr.] To hold; to account; to think.

The king was reputed a prince most prudent. Shakespeare.

I do repute her grace
The rightful heir to England's royal seat. Shakespeare.

I do know of those,
That therefore only are reputed wise,
For saying nothing. Shakespeare.

Men, such as chafe
Law practice for mere gain, boldly repute
Worse than embrothel'd flumpets prostitute. Dove.

If the grand vizier be so great, as he is reputed in politics, he will never content to an invader of Hungary. Temple.

REPU'TE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Character; reputation.

Ethere. Locke.

All thy request for man, accepted Son!
Obtain; all thy request was my decree. Miles.

Ask him to lend
To this, the last request that I shall send,
A gentle ear. Dryden.

2. Demand; repute; credit; state of being desired.

Audius will appear well in these wars, his good opposer Coriolanus being now in no request of the country. Shakespeare.

Whilst this vanity of thinking, that men are obliged to write either systems or nothing, request, many excellent notions are suppressed. Pope.

Knowledge and fame were in as great request as wealth among us now. Temple.

TO REQUE'ST. v. a. [requester, Fr.] To ask; to solicit; to entreat.

To-night we hold a solemn supper, sir,
And I'll request your presence. Shakespeare.

It was to be requeste'd of Almighty God to pray, that those kings would seriously follow that hope of peace. Arbuthnot.

The virgin quire for her request,
The god that sits at marriage feast;
He at their invoking came,
But with a scarce well-lighted flame. Miles.

In things not unlawful, great persons cannot properly said to request, because all things considered, they must not be denied. South.

REQUE'STER. n. f. [from request.] Petitioner; solicitor.

TO REQUICKEN. v. a. [re and quick.] To reanimate.

By and by the din of war 'gan pierce
His ready sense, when straight his double quicken'd what in both was fatigued,
And to the battle came he. Shakespeare.

REQUIRE. n. f. [Latin.]

A hymn in which they implore for the dead requiem or rest.

We should profane the service of the dead, by giving a requiem and such peace to her, to peace-parted souls. Shakespeare.

Rest; quiet; peace. Not in use.
The midwife kneel'd at my mother's throes,
With pain produc'd, and nurs'd for future woes;
She had I an eternal requiem kept.
And in the arms of peace for ever slept. Sandys.

REQUIRABLE. adj. [from require.] Fit to be required.

It contains the certain periods of times, and all circumstances requirable in a history to inform. Hale.

TO REQUIRE. v. a. [requiro, Lat. requere, French.]

1. To demand; to ask a thing as of right.

Ye me require
A thing without the compass of my wit;
For both the lineage and the certain fire,
From which I sprung, are from me hidden yet. Spenser.

We do require them of you, so to use them, as we shall find their merits. Shakespeare.

This, the very law of nature teacheth us to do, and thus the law of God requireth also at our hands. Spelman.

This imply'd
Subjection, but requir'd with gentle sway. Milton.
Oft our alliance other lands desir'd,
And what we seek of you, of us requir'd. Dryden.

2. To make necessary; to need.

The king's business required haste. 1 Samuel.
High from the ground, the branches would require Thy utmost reach. Milton.

But why, alms! do mortal men complain?
God gives us what he knows our wants require,
And better things than those which we desire. Dryden.

God, when he gave the world in common to all mankind, commanded man also to labour; and the penalty of his condition required it. Locke.

REQUISITE. adj. [requisitus, Lat.] Necessary; needful; required by the nature of things.

When God new-modelled the world by the introduction of a new religion, and that in the room of one fit up by himself, it was requisite, that he should recommend it to the reasons of men with the same authority and evidence that enforced the former. South.

Cold collect the spirits to succour, and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the heat, which is ever requisite to sleep. Bacon.

Prepare your soul with all those necessary graces, that are more immediately requisite to this performance. Wake.

REQUISITE. n. f. Any thing necessary.

Reson paria labore, sed velox was thought by a poet to be one of the requisites to a happy life. Dryden.

For want of these requisites, most of our ingenious young men take up some cried up English poet, adore him, and imitate him, without knowing wherein he is defective. Dryden.

God on his part has declared the requisites on ours; what we must do to obtain blessings, as the great business of us all to know. Wake.

REQUISITELY. adv. [from requisite.] Necessarily; in a requisite manner.

We discern how requisitely the several parts of nature are fitted to several times, persons, and occurrences. Boyle.

REQUISITENESS. n. f. [from requisite.] Necessity; the state of being requisite.

Discerning how exquisitely the several parts of nature are fitted to the several times, persons, and occurrences intended, we shall discover not only the sense of the obscure passages, but the requisiteness of their having been written to obscurely. Boyle.

REQUITAL. n. f. [from requite.] 1. Return for any good or bad office; retaliation.

Should we take the quarrel of sermons in hand, and revenge their cause by requital, thrusting prayer in a manner out of doors under colour of long preaching? Harker.

Since you
Wear out your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold, you do so grow in my requital,
As nothing can unroot you. Shakespeare.

We hear
Such goodness of your justice, that our soul
Cannot but yield you forth to publick thanks, Forerunning your requital. Shakespeare.

2. Return; reciprocal action.
No merit their aversion can remove,
Nor ill requital can efface their love. Wallar.

3. Reward; recompense.
He ask'd me for a song,
And in requital of his leathern scrip,
And shew'd me similes of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milt.

I have ta'en a cordial,
Sent by the king of Italy, in requital
Of all my miseries, to make me happy. Denham.

In all the light that the heavens bestow upon this lower world, though the lower world cannot equal their benefaction, yet with a kind of grateful return it reflects those rays, that it cannot recompense; so that there is some return however, though there can be no requital. South.

TO REQUITE. v. a. [requiter, French.]

1. To repay; to retaliate good or ill; to recompense.

If he love me to madness, I shall never requite him. Shakespeare.

An avenger against his enemies, and one that shall requite kindness to his friends. Fecklesius.
Him within protect from harms;
He can requite thee, for he knows the charms
That call fame on such gentle acts as these. Milton.

Great idol of mankind, we neither claim
The praise of merit, nor aspire to fame!
'Tis all we beg thee to conceal from sight
Those acts of goodness which themselves requite:
O let us still the secret joy partake,
To follow virtue ev'n for virtue's sake. Pope.

Unhappy Wallace,
Great patriot hero! all requited chief! Thomson.

2. To do or give in reciprocation.
He hath requited me evil for good. 1 Samuel.

RESCRIPT. n. f. [rescrit, Fr. rescriptum, Lat.] Edict of an emperor.

One finding a great mass of money digged under ground, and being somewhat doubtful, signified it to the emperor, who made a rescript thus: Use it. Bacon.

The popes, in such cases, where canons were silent, did, after the manner of the Roman emperors, write back their determinations, which were filed rescripts or decretal epistles, having the force of laws. Ayliffe.

TO RESCUE. v. a. [rescorre, old Fr.] To set free from any violence, confinement, or danger.

Sir Scudamore, after long sorrow, in the end met with Butomartus, who succoured him and rescued his love. Spenser.

My uncles both are slain in rescuing me. Shallop.
We're best with thieves;
Rescue thy misdeeds, if thou be a man. Shakespeare.

Dr. Bancroft understood the church excellently, and had almost rescued it out of the hands of the Calvinian party. Clarendon.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, if he commit those acts, against which scripture is plain, that they that do them shall not inherit eternal life, must necessarily resolve, that nothing but the removing his fundamental error can rescue him from the superfluity. Hammond.

Who was that just man, whom had not heav'n Rescued, had in his righteousness been lost? Milton.
Riches cannot rescue from the grave,
Which claims alike the monarch and the slave. Dryden.

We have never yet heard of a tumult raised to rescue a minister whom his master desired to bring to a fair account. Darviant.

RESCUE. n. f. [rescussio, rescussio, old Fr. rescussus, low Lat.] Deliverance from violence, danger, or confinement.

effluvia: deface the image, and you direct the right.

RESEMBLANCE. n. f. [resemblance, Fr.]

1. Likeness; similitude; representation.
One map end of poetry and painting is to please; they bear a great resemblance to each other. Dryd.

The quality produced hath commonly no resemblance with the thing producing it, wherefore we look on it as a bare effect of power. Locke

So chymists boast they have a pow'r,
From the dead ashes of a flower,
Some faint resemblance to produce,
But not the virtue. Swift.

I cannot help remarking the resemblance between him and our author in qualities, fame, and to time. Pope.

2. Something resembling.

The sensible things, which religion hath allowed, are resemblances formed according to things spiritual, whereunto they serve as a hand to lead, and a way to direct. Hooker.

Fair is resemblance of thy maker fair,
Thine all things living gaze on. Milton.

They are but weak resemblances of our intentions, faint and imperfect copies that may acquaint us with the general design, but can never express the life of the original. Addison.

TO RESEMBLE. v. a. [resembler, French.]

1. To compare; to represent as like something else.

Molt lately may we resemble ourselves to God, in respect of that pure faculty, which is never separate from the love of God. Raleigh.

The torrid parts of Africa are resembled to a lion's skin, the distance of whole spots represent the disperseness of habitations. Brewster.

2. To be like; to have likeness to.

If we see a man of virtues, mixed with infirmities, fall into misfortune, we are afraid that the like misfortunes may happen to ourselves, who resemble the character. Addison.

TO RESEND. v. a. [re and send.] To send back; to send again. Not in use.

I sent to her, by this same postcomb,
Tokens and letters, which he did resend. Shakspeare.

TO RESENT. v. a. [resentir, French.]

1. To take well or ill.

A serious consideration of the mineral treasures of his territories, and the practical discoveries of them by way of my philosophical theory, he then so well resented, that afterwards, upon a mature digestion of my whole design, he commanded me to let your lordships understand, how great an inclination he hath to further to his useful work. Bacon.

To be deeply from any part of public worship he thus resented. Fell.

2. To take ill; to consider as an injury or affront. This is now the most usual sense.

Thou with scorn
And anger would'st resent the other's wrong. Milton.

Such proceedings have been always resented, and often punished in this kingdom. Davenant.

RESENTER. n. f. [from resent.] One who feels injuries deeply.

The earl was the worst philosopher, being a great resenter, and a weak dissembler of the least disgrace. Watson.

RESENTFUL. adj. [resent and full.] Magnificent; easily provoked to anger, and long retaining it.

RESENTINGLY. adv. [from resenting.]

2. With continued anger.

RESENTMENT. n. f. [resentiment, Fr.]

1. Strong perception of good or ill.

He retains vivid resentments of the more solid morality. More.

Some faces we admire and dont on; others, in our impartial apprehensions, no less deserving, we can behold without resentment, yea, with an invincible disregard. Glanville.

What he hath of sensible evidence, the very grand work of his communication is but the knowledge of his own resentment; but how the same things appear to others, they only know that are conscious to them; and how they are in themselves, only he that made them. Glanville.

2. Deep sense of injury; anger long continued; sometimes simply anger.

Can heavenly minds such high resentment show,
Or exercise their spite in human woe? Dryden.

I cannot, without some envy, and a just resentment, against the opposite conduct of others, reflect upon that generosity, wherewith the heads of a struggling faction treat those who will undertake to hold a pen in their defence. Swift.

Though it is hard to judge of the hearts of people, yet where they declare their resentment, and unfeignedly at any thing, there they put the judgment upon themselves. Law.

RESERVATION. n. f. [reservation, Fr.]

Ourself by monthly course,
With reservation of an hundred knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turns. Shakspeare.

This is academical reservation in matters of easy truth, or rather sceptical infidelity against the evidence of reason. Brown.

These opinions Steele and his faction are endeavouring to propagate among the people concerning the present ministry; with what reservation to the honour of the queen, I cannot determine. Swift.

3. Custody; state of being treasured up.

He will'd me,
In heedful reservation, to bestow them
As notes, whole faculties inclusive were,
More than they of wote. Shakspeare.

RESERVATORY. n. f. [reservoir, French.]

Place in which any thing is reserved or kept.

How I got such notice of that subterranean reservoir as to make a computation of the water now concealed therein, peruse the propositions concerning earthquakes. Woodward.

TO RESERVE. v. a. [reserver, Fr. reservo, Latin.]

1. To keep in store; to save to some other purpose.

I could add many probabilities of the names of places; but they should be too long for this, and I reserve them for another. Spenser.

Hast thou seen the treasures of the hail, which I have reserved against the day of trouble? Job.

David houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them for an hundred chariots. 2 Samuel.

Flowers

Reserved from night, and kept for thee in store. Milton.

2. To retain; to keep; to hold.

Reserve thy state, with better judgment check
This hideous rashness. Shakspeare.

Will the reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end? Jeremiah.

3. To lay up to a future time.

The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished. 2 Peter.

The breach seems like the fissures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to close it, and reserves its cure only for omnipotence. Decay of Piety.

Conceal your esteem and love in your own breast, and reserve your kind looks and language for private hours. Swift.

RESERVE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Store kept untouched, or undiscovered.

The assent may be withheld upon this suggestion, that I know not yet all that may be said; and therefore, though I be bestow, it is not necessary I should yield, not knowing what forces there are in a reserve, being.

2. Something kept very exquisite.

The virgin, besides the oil in their lamps, carried likewise a reserve to some other use for continual supply. 2 Kings.

Things are managed by advocates, who sometimes seek conquest, and not justice, and raise all reserves of law to support an unrighteous cause. Kelland.

3. Something concealed in the mind.

However any one may conceal in the general scheme, it is full with certain reserves and deviations, and with a salvo to his own private sentiment. Adams.

4. Exception; prohibition.

Is knowledge to be deprived?

Or envy, or what reserve forbids to taste? Mack.

5. Exception in favour.

Each has time during lust, which pleases the reserve, and which they would vainly reconcile the expectations of religion. Re.

6. Modesty; caution in personal behaviour.

Ever guardian thought could bring its feather'd
My soul surpris'd, and from herself disjoin'd, Left all reserve, and all the sex behind. Pope.

RESERVED. adj. [from reserve.]

1. Modest; not loosely free.

To all obliging, yet reserved to all,
None could himself the favour'd lover call. Wall.

Fame is a bubble the reserved enjoy,
Who strive to grasp it, as they touch, decay. Yates.

I must give only short hints, and write but a scarcely and reservedly, until I have opportunity express my sentiments with greater openness and perspicuity. Woodward.

2. Scrupulously; coldly.

He speaks reservedly, but he speaks with force. Nor can a word be changed but for a worse. Pope.

RESERVEDNESS. n. f. [from reserved.]

Closeness; want of frankness; want of openness.

Observe their gravity

And their reservedness, their many cautions

Fitting their persons. Ben Jonson.

By formality, I mean something more than ceremony and compliment, even a solemn reserve, which may well consist with honesty. Hume.

There was great warmth and reservedness, as to great jealousy of each other, that they had a mind to give or receive visits. Clermont.

Insimulation can but just guard a man with the compass of his own personal concerns, who yet may be more effectually done by that sim- and reservedness, that every man may manage his private. Scott.

RESERVER. n. f. [from reserve.] One who reserves.

RESERVOIR. n. f. [reservoir, Fr.] Place where any thing is kept in store.

There is not a spring or fountain, but are provided with huge cisterns and reservoirs of ice and snow-water. Addison.

Who sees pale Mammon pine amidst his store,
Sees but a backward steward for the poor;
This year a reservoir, to keep and spare;
The next, a fountain spouting through his heir. Pope.

TO RESETTLE. v. a. [re and settle.] To settle again.

Will the house of Austria yield the least iota even of usurped prerogative, to settle the mediocrity of those princes in the alliance, who are alarmed at the consequences of the emperor's death? De Witt.

RESETTLEMENT. n. f. [from resettling.]

1. The act of settling again.

To the quieting of my passions, and the re-

and of my disappointed soul, I consider that grief is the worst affliction of all the passions. Norris.

2. [respite, old Fr.] To suspend; to delay.

Annet puffed for the satisfaction of the officers of the king's army, by which they were promised payment, in November following; till which time they were to respite it, and be contented that the common soldiers and inferior officers should be satisfied upon their disbanning. Clarendon.

RESPLENDENCE, n. f. [from resplendere, Lat.]

RESPLENDENCY, dent. Lustre; brightness; splendour.

Son! thou in whom my glory I behold
In full resplendence, hear of all my night. Milton.
To neglect that supreme resplendence, that shines in God, for those dim representations of it in the creature, is as absurd as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parhelion instead of adoring the sun. Boyle.

RESPLENDENT, adj. [resplendens, Lat.]

Bright; shining; having a beautiful lustre.

Rich in commodities, beautiful in situation, resplendent in all glory. Candem.
There all within full rich array'd he found,
With royal arms and resplendent gold. Spenser.
The ancient electrum had in it a fifth of silver to the gold, and made a compound metal, as fit for most uses as gold, and more resplendent. Bacon.
Empire of this fair world, resplendent Eve! Milton.

Every body looks most splendid and luminous in the light of its own colour: emerald in the homogeneous light is most resplendent, in the green light it is manifestly less resplendent, in the blue light still less. Newton.

Resplendent brass, and more resplendent dances. Pope.

RESPLENDENTLY, adv. [from resplendens, Lat.] With lustre; brightly; splendidly.

TO RESPOND, v. n. [respondeo, Latin; respondere, Fr.]

1. To answer. Little used.

2. To correspond; to suit.

To every theme responds thy various lay;
Here roars a torrent, there meanders play. Broome.

RESPONDENT, n. f. [respondens, Lat.]

1. An answerer in a suit.

In giving an answer, the respondent should be in court, and personally admonished by the judge to answer the judge's interrogation. Ayliffe.

2. One whose province, in a set disputation, is to refute objections.

How becomingly does Philopolis exercise his office, and tentuously commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practiced moderator? More. The respondent may easily shew, that though wine may do all this, yet it may be finally hurtful to the soul and body of him. Watts.

RESPONSE, n. f. [responsum, Lat.]

1. An answer; commonly an oracular answer.

More natural piety has taught men to receive the responses of the gods with all possible veneration. Government of the Tongue.

The oracles, which had before flourish'd, began to droop, and from giving responses in verse, descended to prose, and within a while were utterly silenced. Harwood.

2. [respons, Fr.] Answer made by the congregation, speaking alternately with the priest in public worship.

To make his parishioners kneel and join in the responses he gave every one of them a haddock and common prayer book. Addison.

3. Reply to an objection in a formal disputation.

Let the respondent not turn opponent; except a retorting the argument upon his adversary after a direct response; and even this is allowed only as a confirmation of his own response. Watts.

RESPONDIBLE, adj. [from respondus, Lat.]

1. Answerable; accountable.

Heathens, who have certainly the talent of natural knowledge, are respondible for it. Horace.

He as much satisfies the itch of telling news, as much persuades his hearers; and all this while he has his retreat secure, and stands not respondible for the truth of his relations. Goe. of the Tongue.

2. Capable of discharging an obligation.

The necessity of a proportion of money to trade depends on money as a pledge, which writings cannot supply the place of; since the bill, I receive from one man, will not be accepted as a security by another, he not knowing that the bill is legal, &c. that the man bound is honest or respondible. Lade.

RESPONDIBLENESS, n. f. [from respondible.]

State of being obliged or qualified to answer.

RESPONSION, n. f. [responsio, Lat.] The act of answering.

RESPONSIVE, adj. [responsif, Fr. from respondus, Lat.]

1. Answering; making answer.

A certificate is a responsive letter, or letter by way of answer. Ayliffe.

2. Correspondent; suited to something; else.

Sing of love and gay desire,
Responsive to the warbling lyre. Fennel.

Be there Demodocus the bard of fame,
Taught by the gods to please, when high he sings
The vocal lay responsive to the strings. Pope.

RESPONSORY, adj. [responsorius, Latin]

Containing answer.

REST, n. f. [rest, Sax. ruste, Dutch.]

1. Sleep; repose.

All things retir'd to rest,
Mind us of like repose. Milton.

My tost limbs are wearied into rest. Pope.

2. The final sleep; the quietness of death.

Off with holy hymns he charm'd their ears,
For David left him, when he went to rest,
His lyre. Dryden.

3. Stillness; cessation or absence of motion.

Putrefaction alketh rest; for the subtle matter which putrefaction requirith, is disturbed by a agitation. Bacon.

What cause mov'd the Creator, in his holy rest,
So late to build? Milton.

All things are past equally and perfectly at rest, and to this way of consideration of them are all one; whether they were before the world, or but yesterday. Locke.

4. Quiet; peace; cessation from disturbance.

Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. Matthew.

He giveth you rest from all your enemies. Daniel.

'Scap'd from such storms of pow'r, holding out
To be below herself to be at rest. Dante.

The root cut off, from whence these tunicles rose,
He should have rest, the commonwealth repairs. Johnson.

Thus fenc'd, but not at rest or ease of mind. Milton.

RES

- Where can a frail man hide him? in what arms shall a short life enjoy a little rest? Fenham.
With what a load of vengeance am I press'd,
Yet never, never, can I hope for rest;
For when my heavy burden I remove,
The weight falls down, and crushes her I love.
Dryden.
Like the sun, it had light and agility; it knew no rest but in motion, no quiet but in activity.
South.
Thither, where sinners may have rest, I go.
Pope.
The grave, where ev'n the great find rest.
Pope.
5. Cessation from bodily labour.
There the weary be at rest. Job.
The Christian chuseth for his day of rest the first day of the week; that he might thereby profess himself a servant of God, who on the morning of that day vanquished Satan. Kelton.
6. Support; that on which any thing leans or rests.
Forth pick'd Clorinda from the throng,
And gaunt Tancredie set her spear in rest.
Fairfax.
A man may think, that a musket may be shot off as well upon the arm, as upon a rest; but when all is done, good counsel letteth business straight.
Bacon.
Their vizors clow'd, their lances in the rest,
Or at the helmet pointed, or the crest;
They speed the race. Dryden.
Take the handle in your right hand, and clasping the blade of it in your left, lean it steadily upon the rest, holding the edge a little adiant over the work, so as a corner of the thin side of the chisel may bear upon the rest, and the flat side of the chisel may make a small angle with the rest.
Moxon.
7. Place of repose.
Suffr'd by him with comforts, till we end
In dust, our final rest and native home. Milton.
8. Final hope.
Sea fights have been final to the war, but this is,
when princes set up their rest upon the battle. Bacon.
This answer would render their counsels of less reverence to the people, it upon those reasons, they should recede from what they had, with that confidence and disdain of the house of peers, demanded of the king; they therefore resolv'd to let up their rest upon that stake, and to go through with it, or perish in the attempt. Clarendon.
9. [rele, Fr. quod restat, Lat.] Remainder; what remains.
Religion gives part of its reward in hand, the present comfort of having done our duty; and for the rest, it offers us the best security that heaven can give. Tillotson.
The pow'r in glory shone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known,
The rest a hunter's. Dryden.
- REST, adj. [relex, Fr. quod restat, Lat.] Others; those not included in any proposition.
By description of their qualities, many things may be learned concerning the rest of the multitude. Abbot.
They had no other consideration of the publick, than that no disturbance might interrupt their quiet in their own days; and that the rest, who had larger hearts and more publick spirits, would extend their labour, activity, and advice only to secure the empire at home by all peaceable arts. Clarendon.
Plato, and the rest of the philosophers, acknowledged the unity, power, wisdom, goodness, and prowidence of the supreme God. Wilmington.
Arm'd like the rest, the Trojan prince appears,
And by his pious labour urges them. Dryden.
Upon equal terms that they all stand, that no one had a tauter pretence of right than the rest.
Woodward.
- To REST, v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To sleep; to be asleep; to slumber.
Fancy then retires
Into her private cell, when nature rests. Milton.
2. To sleep the final sleep; to die.
Vol. II.

RES

- Καίματα: ἵδου ἐνός*
Καίματα: ἵδου ἐνός
Glad I'd lay me down,
As in my mother's lap; there I should rest,
And sleep secure. Milton.
3. To be at quiet; to be at peace; to be without disturbance.
Father let us tend
From off the tossing of these fiery waves,
There rest, if any rest can harbour there. Milton.
4. To be without motion; to be still.
Over the tent a cloud shall rest by day. Milton.
5. To be fixed in any state of opinion.
He will not rest content, though thou givest
many gifts. Proverbs.
Every creature has a share in the common blessings of providence; and every creature should rest well satisfied with its proportion in them. L'Estrange.
After such a lord I rest secure,
Thou wilt no foreign ruin or Trojan load endure.
Dryden.
There yet survives the lawful heir
Of Sancho's blood, whom, when I shall produce,
I rest assur'd to see you pale with fear. Dryden.
6. To cease from labour.
Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest. Exodus.
The ark went before, to search out a resting place for them. Numbers.
From work
Resting, he blest'd the seventh day. Milton.
When you enter into the regions of death, you rest from all your labours and your fears. Taylor.
7. To be satisfied; to acquiesce.
To urge the foe to battle,
Prompted by blind revenge and wild despair,
Were to refuse th' awards of providence,
And not to rest in heaven's determination. Addison.
8. To lean; to recline for support or quiet.
On him I rested,
And, not without confiding, fix'd my fate. Dryden.
Sometimes it rests upon testimony, when testimony of right has nothing to do; because it is easier to believe, than to be scientifically instructed. Locke.
The philosophical use of words conveys the precise notions of things, which the mind may rest upon, and be satisfied with, in its search after knowledge. Locke.
9. [resto, Lat. rester, Fr.] To be left; to remain.
Fall'n he is; and now
What rests, but that the mortal sentence pass
On his transgression? Milton.
There resteth the comparative, that is, its being granted, that it is either lawful or binding, yet whether other things be not preferred before it, as extirpation of heretics. Bacon.
- To REST, v. a.
1. To lay to rest.
Your piety has paid
All needfulness, to rest my wand'ring shade. Dryden.
2. To place as on a support.
As the vex'd world, to find repose, at last,
Itself into Augustus' arms did cast;
So England now doth, with like toil oppress'd,
Her weary head upon your bosom rest. Waller.
The protestants having well studied the fathers, were now willing to rest their cause, not upon scripture only, but fathers too; so far at least as the three first centuries. Waterland.
Here rests his head upon the lap of earth,
A youth to fortune and to fame unknown. Gray.
- RESTAGNANT, adj. [restagnans, Latin.]
Remaining without flow or motion.
Upon the tops of high mountains, the air, which bears against the restagnant quicksilver, is less press'd by the less ponderous incumbent air. Boyle.
- To RESTAGNATE, v. n. [re and stagnate.] To stand without flow.
The blood returns thick, and is apt to restagnate.
Wylman.
- RESTAGNATION, n. f. [from restagnate.]
The state of standing without flow, course, or motion.
- RESTAURATION, n. f. [restauratio, Latin.]

RES

- The act of recovering to the former state.
Adam is in us an original cause of our nature,
and of that corruption of nature which causeth death; Christ is the cause original of restoration to life. Hooker.
O my dear father! restoration hang Thy neck on me on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made. Shakespeare.
Spermatical parts will not admit a regeneration, much less will they receive an integral restoration.
Brown.
- To RESTORE, v. a. [re and stem.] To force back against the current.
How they restore
Then backward courts, bearing with frank appearance Toward Cyprus. Shakespeare.
- RESTFUL, adj. [rest and full.] Quiet;
being at rest.
Is not my arm of length,
That reacheth from the restful English court,
As far as China to my uncle's head? Shakespeare.
- RESTHARROW, n. f. A plant.
- RESTIVE, adj. [restis, Fr. restivo, Ital.] Unwilling to stir; restive against going forward; obstinate; stubborn. It is originally used of a horse, that, though not wearied, will not be driven forward.
All, who before him did ascend the throne,
Labour'd to draw three restive nations on. Rafson.
This restive stubbornness is never to be excused under any pretence wh. they are. L'Estrange.
Some, with tedious care,
Their restful flocks in sandy plains prepare. Dryden.
The archangel, when discord was restive, and would not be drawn from her beloved monastery with fair words, drags her out with many stripes.
Dryden.
So James the drawy genius wakes
Of Britain, long entranc'd in charms,
Restless, and slumbering on its arms. Dryden.
The pamper'd colt will discipline disdain,
Impatient of the lash, and restful to the rein. Dryden.
2. Being at rest; being less in motion.
Not used.
Pallies oftenest appear upon the left side; the most vigorous part protecting itself, and protruding the matter upon the weaker and restful side. Brown.
- RESTLESSNESS, n. f. [from restless.] Obstinate reluctance.
Overt virtues bring forth praise; but secret virtues bring forth forbearance: certain deliveries of a man's self, which the Spanish name delectableness, partly expelleth, where there be not stands nor restlessness in a man's nature; but the wheels of his mind keep way with the wheels of his fortune.
Bacon.
That it gave occasion to some men's further restlessness, is imputable to their own depraved tempers. King Charles.
- RESTINCTION, n. f. [restinctus, Latin.]
The act of extinguishing.
- RESTITUTION, n. f. [restitutio, Latin.]
1. The act of restoring what is lost or taken away.
To subdue an usurper, should be no unjust enterprise or wrongful war, but a restitution of ancient rights to the crown of England, from whence they were most unjustly expelled and long kept out. Spencer.
He would pawn his fortunes
To hope's false restitution, so he might
He call'd your conqueror. Shakespeare.
He restoration to the value makes,
Nor pay in his extorted treasure takes. Sancho.
Whoever is an effective real cause of doing a neighbour wrong, by what instrument soever he does it, is bound to make restitution. Taylor.
In case our officers against God hath begun complac'd with injury to men, it is but reasonable we should make restitution. Tillotson.
A great man, who has never been known willingly to pay a just debt, ought not all of a sudden to be introduced, making restitution of thousands

he has cheated: let it suffice to pay twenty pounds to a friend, who has lost his note. Arbuthnot

2. The act of recovering its former state or posture.

In the woody parts of plants, which are their bones, the principles are so compounded, as to make them flexible without joints, and also elastic, that so their roots may yield to stones, and their trunks to the wind, with a power of restitution. Green

RESTLESSLY. adv. [from restless.] Without rest; unquietly.

When the mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, strains this power of the soul to apprehend, that to judge, another to divide, a fourth to remember: thus tracing out the nice and scarce observable difference of some things, and the real agreement of others; at length it brings all the ends of a long hypothesis together. South

RESTLESSNESS. n. f. [from restless.]

1. Want of sleep.

Restlessly and intermission from sleep, grieved persons are molested with, whereby the blood is dried. Harvey

2. Want of rest; unquietness.

Let him keep the rest, But keep them with repining restlessly; Let him be rich and weary, that at least, If goodness lead him not, yet weariness May toss him to my breast. Herbert

I sought my bed, in hopes of relief to find, But restlessly was mistress of my mind. Hart

3. Motion; agitation.

The trembling restlessness of the needle, in any but the north point of the compass, manifests its inclination to the pole; which its wavering and its rest bear equal witness to. Bayly

RESTLESS. adj. [from rest.]

1. Being without sleep.

Restless he pass'd the remnants of the night, Till the fresh air proclaim'd the morning right: And burning ships, the martyrs of the fight, With quivering fires beheld the eastern sky. Dryden

2. Unquiet; without peace.

Ease to the body some, none to the mind From restless thoughts, that like a deadly swarm Of hornets arm'd, no sooner found alone, But rush upon me thronging, and prevent Times past, what once I was, and what I'm now. Milton

Could we not wake from that lethargick dream, But to be restless in a worse extreme? Denham

We find our souls disordered and restless, tossed and disquieted by passions, ever seeking happiness in the enjoyments of this world, and ever missing what they seek. Atterbury

What tongue can speak the restless monarch's woes, When God and Nathan were declar'd his foes? Prior

3. Unconstant; unsettled.

He was stout of courage, strong of hand, Bold was his heart, and restless was his tongue. Fairfax

He's proud, fantastick, apt to change, Restless at home, and ever prone to rage. Dryden

4. Not still; in continual motion.

How could nature on their orbs impose Such restless revolution, day by day Repeated? Milton

The father himself virtue shall restore, And crimes shall threat the guilty world no more. Dryden

Thus pencils can, by one slight touch, restore Smiles to that changed face, that wept before. Dryden

3. To retrieve; to bring back from degeneration, declension, or ruin, to its former state.

Loss of Eden, tell one greater man Restore it, and regain the blissful seat. Milton

The archangel paus'd Between the world destroy'd and world restor'd. Milton

These artificial experiments are but so many essays, whereby men attempt to restore themselves from the first general curse inflicted upon their labours. Wilkins

In his Odyssey, Homer explains, that the hardest difficulties may be overcome by labour, and our fortune restored after the severest afflictions. Prior

4. To cure; to recover from disease.

Gurth, sifter than a plague destroys, restores. Graville

5. To recover passages in books from corruption.

RESTORER. n. f. [from restore.] One that restores; one that recovers the lost, or repairs the decayed.

Next to the Son, Destin'd restorer of mankind, by whom New heav'n and earth shall to the ages rise. Milton

I foretell you, as the restorer of poetry. Dryden

Here are ten thousand persons reduced to the necessity of a low diet and moderate exercise, who are the only great restorers of our breed, without which, the nation would in an age become one great hospital. Swift

To RESTRAIN. v. a. [restringere, Fr. restringo, Latin.]

1. To withhold; to keep in.

If the restrain'd the roots of your followers, 'Tis to such whole time and as clears her. Shakespeare

The gods will plague thee, That thou restrain'st from me the duty, which To a mother's part belongs. Shakespeare

2. To repress; to keep in awe.

The law of nature would be in vain, if there were no body that, in the state of nature, had a power to execute that law, and thereby preserve the innocent and restrain offenders. Locke

That all men may be restrained from doing hurt to one another, the execution of the law of nature is in that state put into every man's hand, whereby every one has a right to punish the transgressors to such a degree as may hinder its violation. Locke

3. To suppress; to hinder; to repress.

Merciful powers! Refrain in me the cursed thoughts, that nature Gives way to in repose. Shakespeare

4. Repression; hinderance of will; act of withholding; state of being withheld.

RES

There is no restraint to the Lord to save, by many or by few.

Thus it shall befall him who, to worth in woman overtrusting, Lest her will rule; restraint the will not brook. Milt.

Is there any thing which reflects a greater lustre upon a man's person, than a severe temperance, and a restraint of himself from vicious pleasures? South.

TO RESTRICT. v. a. [restrictus, Latin.]
To limit; to confine. A word scarce English.

In the enumeration of constitutions in this chapter, there is not one that can be limited and restricted by such a distinction, nor can perhaps the same person, in different circumstances, be properly confined to one or the other. Arbutnot.

RESTRICTION. n. f. [restriction, French.]
Confinement; limitation.

This is to have the same restriction with all other recreations, that it be made a diversion, and a trade.

Government of the Tongue.
Iron manufacture, of all others, ought the least to be encouraged in Ireland; or, if it be, it requires the most restriction to certain places. Temple.

All duties are matter of conscience; with this restriction, that a superior obligation suspends the force of an inferior. L'Estrange.

Each other gift, which God on man bestows,
Its proper bounds and due restriction knows;
To one fix'd purpose dedicates its power. Prior.
Celsus's rule, with the proper restrictions, is good for people in health. Arbutnot.

RESTRICTIVE. adj. [from restrict.]

1. Expressing limitation.

They, who would make the restrictive particle belong to the latter clause, and not to the first, do not attend to the reason. Stillington.

2. [restrictif, French.] Styptick; astringent.
I lapped a plaster over it, made up with my common restrictive powder. Hysman.

RESTRICTIVELY. adv. [from restrictive.]

have returns and vicissitudes; for ordnance was shown in the city of the Oxidracres in India, and what the Macedonians called thunder and lightning. Bacon.

Repayment of money laid out in commodities for sale.

As for any merchandise you have bought, ye shall have your return in merchandize or gold. Bacon.

As to roots as clustered in their opening, there is a high price that those things bear, and the twitles of their returns; for, in some grounds, a radish comes in a month, that in others will not come in so, and so make double returns. Bacon.

Profit; advantage.

The fruit, from many days of recreation, is ery little; but from these few hours we spend in rayer, the return is great. Taylor.

place.

Within these two months, I do expect return thence three times the value of this bond. Shaksp.

Brokers cannot have less money by them, than one twentieth part of their yearly returns. Locke.

8 Repayment; retribution; requital.

You made my liberty your late request:
I no return due from a grateful breast?
I grow impatient, till I find some way,
Great offices, with greater to repay. Dryden.

Since these are some of the returns which we owe to God after obtaining our successes, can we reasonably presume, that we are in the favour of God? Atterbury.

Nothing better becomes a person in a publick character, than such a publick spirit; nor is there any thing likely to procure him larger returns of honour. Atterbury.

Returns, like these, our mistress bids us make.
When from a foreign prince a gift her Britons take. Prior.

Ungrateful lord!

Wouldst thou invade my life, as a return
For proffer'd love? Rome.

9. Act of restoring or giving back; restitution.

The other ground of God's sole property in any thing, is the gift, or rather the return of it made by man to God. South.

manor.

The reve, the miller, and the muncing lady prooves speak in character. Dryden.

To REVEAL. v. a. [revelo, Lat. reveler,
French.]

1. To show; to discover; to lay open; to disclose a secret.

Be affirmed: speaking again that which thou hast heard, and revealing of secrets. Ecclesiasticus.

I fight was the wound, the prince's cure unknown,
She might not, would not yet reveal her own. Waller.

The answer to one who asked what time was, si non regas intelligo; that is, the more I think of time, the less I understand it; might persuade one, that time, which reveals all other things, is itself not to be discovered. Locke.

Thy throne is darkness in the abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the light;
O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd.
And search no further than thyself reveal'd. Dryden.

2. To impart from heaven.

The sufferings of this life are not to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. Romans.

REVEAL'ER. n. f. [from reveal.]

1. Discoverer; one that shows or makes known.

The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, as a stable assent unto things inevi-dent, upon authority of the divine revealer. Brown.

The lives of the revealers may be jfully set over against the revelation, to find whether they agree. Atterbury.

2. One that discovers to view.

He brought a taper; the revealers light
Expos'd both crime and criminal to light. Dryden.

To REVEL. v. n. [Skinner derives it from reveler, French, to awake; Lye from revelen, Dutch, to rove loosely about, which is much countenanced by the old phrase, revel-rout.] To feast with loose and clamorous merriment.

My honey love,
Will we return unto thy father's house,
And revel it as bravely as the best. Shakspere.

We'll keep no great ado—a friend or two.
Tybalt being slain to late,
It may be thought we held him carelessly,
Being our kinsman, if we revel much. Shakspere.

Antony, that revels long o' nights,
Is up. Shakspere.

We shall have retelling to-night;
I will assume thy part in some disguise. Shakspere.

He can report you more odd tales
Of our outlaw Robin Hood,
That revel'd here in Sherewood,
Though he we'er shot in his bow. Ben Jonson.

Were the doctrine new,
That the earth mov'd, this day would make it true;
For every part to dance and revel goes,
They tread the air, and fall not where they rose. Donne.

REV

Where've I revel'd in the women's houses;
For first I sought her but at leister hours;
The apples she had gather'd sweet most sweet. Prior.

RE'VEL. n. f. [from the verb.] A feast with loose and noisy jollity.

Let them pinch th' unclean knight,
And ask him, wh' the hour of hury revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread? Shaksp.

They could do no less but, under your fair conduct,
Crave leave to view these ladies, and intreat
An hour of revels with them. Shakspere.

To RE'VEL. v. a. [revello, Latin.] To retract; to draw back.

Those, who murther, escape by their blood, reveling the humours from their lungs. Harvey.

Venefaction in the left arm does more immediate revel, yet the difference is minute. Friend.

RE'VEL-ROU'T. n. f.

1. A mob; an unlawful assembly of a rabble. Anjsworth.

For this his merriment, the revel-rout is done. Rowe.

REVELA'TION. n. f. [from revelation, Fr.]

1. Discovery; communication; communication of sacred and mysterious truths by a teacher from heaven.

When the divine revelations were committed to writing, the Jews were such scrupulous reverers of them, that they numbered even the letters of the Old Testament. Decay of Piety.

As the gospel appears in respect of the law to be a clearer revelation of the mystical part, so it is a far more benign dispensation of the practical part. Spatt.

2. The apocalypse; the prophecy of St.
John, revealing future things.

RE'VELLER. n. f. [from revel.] One who feasts with noisy jollity.

Fancies black, grey, green, and white,
You moonshame revellers attend your office. Shaksp.

Unwelcome revellers, whose lawless joy
Pains the sage ear, and hurts the sober eye. Pope.

RE'VELRY. n. f. [from revel.] Loose jollity; festive mirth.

Forget this new-fall'n dignity,
And fall into our rubick revelry. Shakspere.

There let Hymen oft appear
In saffron robe with taper clear,
And pomp, and feast, and revelry,
With mask and antic pagantry. Milton.

To REVENGE. v. a. [revenger, revancher, French.]

enemy.

It our hard fortune no compassion draws,
The gods are just, and will revenge our cause. Dryden.

3. To wreak one's wrongs on him that inflicted them. With the reciprocal pronoun, or in a passive sense.

Came, Antony and young Octavius, Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius. Shakspere.

It is a quarrel most unpartial,
To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee. Shaksp.

Northumberland flew thy father;
And thine, lord Clifford; and you vow'd revenge:
Hl be not, heav'n's be reveng'd on me. Shaksp.

Edom hath revenged himjef upon Judah. Ezekiel.

O Lord, visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors. Jeremiah.

Who shall come to stand against thee, to be revenged for the unrighteous men? Wisdom.

Your fury of a woe,
Not yet content to be reveng'd on you,
Th' agents of your passion will pursue. Dryden.

REVENGE. n. f. [revanche, revanche, Fr.]

1. Return of an injury.

May we, with the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with further revenge. Shakespeare.

I will make mine arrows drunk with blood; from the beginning of revenges upon the enemy. Druter.

Deformed persons are commonly even with nature;
for as nature has done ill by them, so they do by nature; being void of natural affection;
they have their revenge of nature. Bacon.

What will not ambition and revenge defend to?

Milton.

The satyr in a rage
Forgets his business to laugh and bite,
And will of death and dire revenges write. Dryden.
Draco, the Athenian law-giver, granted an immunity to any person that took revenge upon an adulterer. Horace.

1. The passion of vengeance; desire of hurting one from whom hurt has been received.

Revenge burn in them for their dear causes
Would, to the blessing and the grim alarm, Excite the mortified man. Shakespeare.

2. Revenge is an act of passion; vengeance of justice. Injuries are revenged, crimes are avenged. This distinction is perhaps not always preserved.

REVENGEFUL. adj. [from revenge.] Vindictive; full of revenge; full of vengeance.

May my hands
Never brandish more revengeful steel
Over the glittering helmet of my foe. Shakespeare.

If thy revengeful heart cannot tolerate,
Lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword,
Which lute in this true breast. Shakespeare.

Into my borders now Jerbas falls,
And my revengeful brother scales the walls. Dryden.
Repeating England, thus revengeful day,
To Philip's name did an off'ring bring. Dryden.

REVENGEFULLY. adv. [from revengeful.] Vindictively.

He smil'd revengefully, and leapt'd
Upon the floor; thence gazing at the skies,
His eye-balls fiery red, and glowing vengeance;
Gods I accute you not. Dryden.

REVENGER. n. f. [from revenge.]

1. One who revenges; one who wreaks his own or another's injuries.

May be, that better reason will assuage
The rash revenger's heat; words, well dispos'd,
Have secret pow'r to appease enflamed rage. Spenser.

I do not know,
Wherefore my father should revengers want,
Having a son and friends. Shakespeare.

So shall the great revenger ruinate
Him and his office, by a dreadful fate. Sandys.

Morocco's monarch
Had come to person, to have seen an unknown
The injur'd world's revenger and his own. Waller.

2. One who punishes crimes.
What government can be imagined, without judicial proceedings? and what methods of punishment, without a religious oath, which supposes an omnipotent being, as confessor to its falsehood or truth, and a revenger of perjury? Bacon.

REVENGEMENT. n. f. [from revenge.]
Vengeance; return of an injury.

It may dwell
In her son's flesh to mind revengement,
And be for all chaste dances an endless monument. Spenser.

By the perforce of the same verse, vagabond is understood for such a one as travelleth in fear of revengement. Raleigh.

REVENGINGLY. adv. [from revengeing.]
With vengeance; vindictively.

I've belov'd a lady,
The princeess of this country; and the air on't Revengeingly enticeth me. Shakespeare.

REVENUE. n. f. [revenue, French.] Income; annual profits received from lands or other funds.

They privily lend over unto them the revenues where with they are there maintained. Spenser.
She bears a duke's revenues on her back.

And in her heart learns our poverty. Shakespeare.

Only I retain

The name and all the addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, beloved souls, be yours. Shalf.

Many officers are of so small revenue, as not to furnish a man with what is sufficient for the support of his life. Temple.

If the woman could have contented with golden eggs, she might have kept that revenue on fall. L'Arrange.

His vassals easy, and the owner blest,
They pay a tribute, and enjoy the rest;
Not to a nation's revenues are paid;

The servant's faults are on the master laid. Swift.
When men grow great from their revenue spent,
And fly from battles into parliament. Young.

To REVERBERATE. v. a. [reverbero, Latin.] 'To resound; to reverberate. Not in use.

Reverse thy state, with better judgment check
This hideous radiant light:
The youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Not she those empty hearted, whose loud found Reverbs no hollows. Shakespeare.

REVERBERANT. adj. [reverberans, Lat.] Resounding; beating back. The reading in the following passage should be, I think, reverberant.

Hollow your name to the reverberate hills,
And make the babbling gossip of the air?

Cry out, Olyvia! Shakespeare.
To REVERBERATE. v. a. [reverbero,
Lat. reverberer, Fr.]

1. To beat back.
Nor doth he know them for aught,
Till he behold them formed in the applause
Where they're extended; which, like an arch, reverberates

The sound again. Shakespeare.
As the light of the eye is like a glass, so is the ear a sonorous cave, with a hard bone, to stop and reverberate the sound. Bacon.

As we, to improve the nobler kinds of fruits, are at the expense of walls to receive and reverberate the faint rays of the sun, so we, by the help of a good soil, equal the production of warmer countries. Swift.

2. To beat in an intense furnace, where the flame is reverberated upon the matter to be melted or cleaned.

Crocus mantis, that is steel corroded with vinegar or sulphur, and after reverberated with fire, the loadstone will not attract. Brown.

To REVERBERATE. v. n.
1. To be driven back; to bound back.

The rays of royal majesty reverberated so strongly upon Villeroi, that they dispelled all clouds. Howel.

2. To resound.

And echo with the clamour of thy drum,
And ev'n at hand a drum is ready braced,
That shall reverberate all as well as thine. Shalf.

REVERBERATION. n. f. [reverberation,
Fr. from reverberate.] The act of beating or driving back.

To the reflection of visibles, small glasses suffice;
but to the reverberation of audibles, are required greater spaces. Bacon.

The first repetitions follow very thick; for two parallel walls beat the sound back on each other, like the several reverberations of the same image from two opposite looking glasses. Atkinson.

REVERBERATORY. adj. [reverberatoire,
Fr.] Returning; beating back.

Good humors may be made of all kinds of flints,
but they are hard to burn, except in a reverbera-tory kiln. Mason.

To REVERBERATE. v. a. [reverberer, Fr. reverberer, Latin.] To reverberate; to honour; to venerate; to regard with awe.

An emperor often stamped on his coins the face or ornaments of his colleague, and we may suppose Lucius Verus would omit no opportunity of doing honour to Marcus Aurelius, whom he rather revered as his father, than treated as his partner in the empire. Addison.

Jove shall again reverse your pow'r,
And rise a swan, or fall a show'r. Row.

Taught 'em how clemency made pow'r reverse,
And that the prince below'd was truly fear'd. Pope.

REVERENCE. n. f. [reverence, Fr. reveren-tia, Lat.]

1. Veneration; respect; awful regard.
When quarrels and factions are carried openly,
A sign the reverence of government is lost. Bacon.

Higher of the genial bed,
And with mysterious reverence I deem. Milton.

In your prayers, use reverent postures and the lowest gestures of humility, remembering that we speak to God, in our reverence to whom we cannot exceed. Tully.

A poet cannot have too great a reverence for his readers. Dryden.
The fear, acceptable to God, is a filial fear, an awful reverence of the divine nature, proceeding from a just esteem of his perfections, which proceeds in us an inclination to his service, and an willingness to offend him. Row.

2. Act of obsequence; bow; courtesy.
Now is she there,

And none so poor to do him reverence. Shakespeare.
He led her easily forth,
Where Godfrey sat among his lords and peers,
She reverence did, then blusht as one dismay'd.

Had not men the heavy heads rever'd,
Or boys paid reverence when a man appeareth,
Both must have dy'd. Dryden.

Up starts the bedlam,
And reverence made, accosted thus the queen. Dryden.

The monarch
Commands into the court the beauteous Emily
So call'd, the came; the feaute rose and paid Becoming reverence to the royal maid. Dryden.

3. Title of the clergy.
Many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall invite us to. Shalf.

4. Poetical title of a father.
O my dear father! let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made. Shakespeare.

To REVERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To regard with reverence; to regard with awful respect.

Those that I reverence, those I fear, the wise,
At tools I laugh, not fear them. Shakespeare.

While they possess pure nature's healthfulness
To loathsome sickness, worthily since they God's image did not reverence in themselves. Mt.

He flew Action, but despis'd him not;
Nor in his hate the funeral rites forgot;
Arm'd as he was, he feat him whole before,
And reverence'd thus the man's of his foe. Dryden.

As his goodness will forbid us to dread him as slaves, so his majesty will command us to reverence him as sons. Bacon.

He pretends every one to often before God must prayers, that he never thinks he can offend in reverence, or serve those enough, for whom he imports so many merits from God. Lock.

REVERENCER. n. f. [from reverence.]
One who regards with reverence.

The Athenians, quite sunk in their affairs, had little commerce with the rest of Greece, and were become great reverencers of crowned heads. Swift.

REVEREND. adj. [reverend, Fr. reverendus,
Latin.]

1. Venerable; deserving reverence; exalting respect by his appearance.

Let his lack of years be no impediment to let him lack a reverend estimation. Shakespeare.

Reverend and gracious senators, Onus, who had been high priest, reverend in conversation, and gentle in condition, pray'd to the Jews. Maccabees.

A parish priest was of the pilgrim train,
An awful, reverend and religious man,
His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,
And charity itself was in his face. Dryden.

A reverend fire among them came,
Who preach'd conversion and repentance. Mt.

Reverend old man! As here contented stands.

Pope.

Satan's right side. Milton.

4. To contradict; to repeal.
Ponder it was in the eye of his understanding, that sometimes an erroneous sentence definitive should prevail, till the same authority, perceiving such oversight, might afterwards correct or reverse it, than that strikes should have respite to grow, and not come speedily upon some end. Hooker.
A decree was made, that they had forfeited their liberties; and albeit they made great moans, yet could they not procure this sentence to be reversed.

Hayward.

Death, his doom which I
To mitigate thus plead, not to reverse,
To better life shall yield him. Milton.

Though grace may have reversed the condemning sentence, and sealed the sinner's pardon before God, yet it may have left no transcript of that pardon in the sinner's breast. South.

turnable.

REVERY. n. f. [reverie, French.] Loosening; irregular thought.

Revery is when ideas float in our mind, without any reflection or regard of the understanding. Locke.

If the minds of men were laid open, we should see but little difference between that of the wise man and that of the fool; there are infinite reveries and numberless extravagancies pass through both.
Addison.

I am really so far gone, as to take pleasure in reveries of this kind. Pope.

TO REVERT. v. a. [revertir, revertir, Fr.
revertio, Lat.]

To REVOCATE, v. a. [revoco, Latin.] To recall; to call back.

His successor, by order, withdrew
Many his patents, and did revoke
And re-assume his liberties. David.

REVOCATION, n. f. [revocation, French; revocatio, Latin.]

1. Act of recalling.

One, that saw the people bent for the revocation of Calvin, gave him notice of their affection. Hooker.

2. State of being recalled.

Elsiana's king commanded Chenardra to tell him that he had received advice of his revocation. Howell.

3. Repeal; reversal.

A law may cease to be in force, without an express revocation of the lawgiver. Watts.

If a grievance be inflicted on a person, he may appeal; it is not necessary to pray a revocation of such a grievance. Aylmer.

To REVOQUE, v. a. [revouer, Fr. revoco, Lat.]

1. To repeal; to reverse.

When we abrogate a law as being ill made, the whole cause for which it was made still remaining, do we not herein revoke our very own deed, and upbraid ourselves with folly, yea all that were makers of it with oversight and error? Hooker.

What reason is there, but that those grants and privileges should be revoked, or reduced to the first intention? Spenser.

Without my Aurenzebe I cannot live;
Revoke his doom, or else my sentence give. Dryden.

and revomiting what they drink. Hucknell.

REVULSION. n. f. [revulsion, Fr. revulsus, Lat.] The act of revelling or drawing humours from a remote part of the body.

Derivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote or contrary part, we call it revulsion; if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means, we call it derivation. Wijeman.

There is a way of revulsion to let blood in an adverse part. Bacon.

I had heard of some strange cures of frenzies, by casual applications of fire to the lower parts, which seems reasonable enough, by the violent revulsion
it may make of humours from the head. Temple.

REVULSIVE. adj. Having the power of revulsion.

His flux of blood breaking forth again with greater violence than it had done before, was not to be stopped by outward applications, nor the revulsives of any kind. Fell.

To REWARD. v. a. [re and award, to give in return. Skinner.]

1. To give in return.

Thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil. 1 Samuel.

They rewarded me evil for good. Psalms.

2. To repay; to recompense for something good.

God rewards those that have made use of the single talent, that lowest proportion of grace, which he is pleased to give; and the method of his rewarding is by giving them more grace. Hammond.

To judge the unfaithful dead, but to reward
His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton.

There is no more reason to reward a man for believing that four is more than three, than for being hungry or sleepy; because these things do not proceed from choice, but from natural necessity. A man must do so, nor can he do otherwise. Wilkes.

The Supreme Being rewards the just, and punishes the unjust. Brown.

REWARD. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Recompense given for good performed.

Rewards and punishments do always presuppose something willingly done well or ill, without which respect, though we may sometimes receive good, yet then it is only a benefit, and not a reward. Hooker.

To myself I owe this due regard,
Not to make love my gift, but my reward. Dryden.

Men have consented to the immortality of the soul and the recompenses of another world, promising to themselves some rewards of virtue after this life. Tillotson.

2. It is sometimes used with a mixture of irony, for punishment or recompense of evil.

REWARDABLE. adj. [from reward.] Worthy of reward.

Men's actions are judged, whether in their own nature rewardable or punishable. Hooker.

The action that is but indifferent, and without reward, if done only upon our own choice, is an act of religion, and rewardable by God, if done in obedience to our superiors. Taylor.

REWARDER. n. f. [from reward.] One that rewards; one that recompenses.

A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakspere.

As the Supreme Being is the only proper judge of our perfections, so is he the only fit rewarder of them. Addison.

All judges, as well as rewarders, have popular assemblies been, of those who best deserved from them. Swift.

To REWORD. v. a. [re and word.] To repeat in the same words.

Bring me to the test,
And I the matter will reward; which madness
Would gambol from. Shakspere.

RIABARBARATE. adj. [from rhabarbara, Latin.] Impregnated or tintured with rhubarb.

The salt humours must be evacuated by the co-mate, rhabarbarate, and sweet mann purgers, with acids added, or the purging waters. Floyer.

RHABDOMANCY. n. f. [ῥαβδος and μαντρία.] Divination by a wand.

Of peculiar rhabdomancy is that which is used in mineral discoveries, with a forked hazel, commonly called Moles's rod, which, freely held forth, will stir and play if any mine be under it. Brown.

RHAPSODIST. n. f. [from rhapsody.] One who writes without regular dependance of one part upon another.

Ask our rhapsodist, if you have nothing but the excellence and loveliness of virtue to preach, and no future rewards or punishments, how many vicious wretches will you ever reclaim? Watts.

RHAPSODY. n. f. [ῥαψωδία; ῥαψω, to sew, and ὁδός, a song.] Any number of parts joined together, without necessary dependance or natural connection.

Such a deed, as sweet religion makes
A rhapsody of words. Shakspere.

This confusion and rhapsody of discourses was not to be supposed in each single harmonist.

He, that makes no reflection on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales fit for the entertainment of others. Locke.

The words slide over the ears, and vanish like a rhapsody of evening tales. Watts.

RHEIN-BERRY. n. f. [spina cervina, Lat.]
Buckthorn, a plant.

RHETORICK. n. f. [ῥητορικὴ; rhetorique,
French.]

1. The art of speaking not merely with propriety, but with art and elegance.

We could not allow him an orator, who had the best thoughts, and who knew all the rules of rhe-torique, if he had not acquired the art of using them.
Dryden.

Of the passions, and how they are moved, Asistote, in his second book of rhetorick, hath admirably discriminated in a little compass. Locke.

Grammar teaches us to speak properly, rhe-torick instructs to speak elegantly. Baker.

2. The power of persuasion; oratory.

The heart's full rhetorick, disclosed with sighs.
Shakspere.

His lab'ring lips then did le faintly part,
Whence of pure rhetorick whole Athens outflow.
Fulgent.

Enjoy your dear wit and pay rhetorick,
That hath to well been taught her dialing face. Milton.

RHETORICAL. adj. [rhetoricus, Latin;
from rhetorick.] Pertaining to rhetorick;
oratorical; figurative.

The apprehension is so deeply riveted into my mind, that rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen it. Mare.

Because Brutus and Cassius met a blackmore, and Pompey had on a dark garment at Tharsalia, these were pretexts of their overthrow, which notwithstanding are scarce rhetorical sequels; concluding metaphors from realities, and from conceptions metaphorical inferring realities again. Brown.

The subject may be moral, logical, or rhetorical,
which does not come under our senses. Watts.

RHETORICALLY. adv. [from rhetorical.] Like an orator; figuratively; with intent to move the passions.

To RHETORICATE. v. n. [rhetoricor, low Latin; from rhetorick.] To play the orator; to attack the passions.

'I will be much more sensible to reform, than apologize or rhetorate; not to suffer themselves to perish in the midst of such solicitations to be saved. Decay of Piety.

RHETORICIAN. n. f. [rhetoricien, French;
rhetor, Latin.]

1. One who teaches the science of rhe-torick.

The ancient sophists and rhetoricians, which ever had young auditors, lived till they were an hundred years old. Bacon.

'Tis the business of rhetoricians to treat the characters of the passions. Dryden.

A man may be a very good rhetorician, and yet at the same time a mean orator. Baker.

2. An orator. Let's proper.

He play'd at Lions a declaiming prize,
At which the vanquish'd rhetorician dies. Dryden.

RHETORICIAN. adj. Suited a master of rhetorick.

Boldly presum'd with rhetorician pride,
To hold of any question either side. Blackmore.

RHEUM. n. f. [ῥευμα; rheume, French.]

A thin watery matter oozing through the glands, chiefly about the mouth. Quincy.

Trust not these cunning waters of his eyes;
For stibium is not without such a rheum;
And he, long traded just, makes it seem Like rivers of vermilion. Shakspere.

You did void your rheum upon my beard. Shaksp.

Each changing stream does its poison bring,
Rheum chill the water, agues bind the spring.

RHEUMATICK, adj. [ῥευματικός; from rheuma.] Proceeding from rheum or a peccant watery humour.

The moon, the governess of floods,
Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
That rheumatick diseases do abound. Shakespeare
The blood taken away looked very fizy or rheumatick. Flower

RHEUMATISM, n. s. [ῥευματισμός; rheumatisme, French; rheumatismus, Latin.] A painful distemper supposed to proceed from acrid humours.

Rheumatism is a distemper affecting chiefly the membranous communis musculorum, which it makes rigid and unfit for motion; and it seems to be occasioned almost by the same causes, as the mucilaginous glands in the joints are rendered stiff and gritty in the gout. Quincy

The throbbing quinsy, 'tis my star appoints,
And rheumatism I tend to rack the joints. Dryden
RHEUMY, adj. [from rheum.] Full of sharp moisture.

Is Brutus sick?
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night?
And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air,
To add unto his sickness? Shakespeare
The south he loo'd, who night and horror brings,
And fogs are shaken from his flaggy wings:
From his divided beard two streams he pours;
His head and rheumy eyes dilt in thow'rs. Dryden

RHINOCEROS, n. s. [ῥίς and κίρας; rhinoceros, French.] A vast beast in the East Indies armed with a horn on his nose.

Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tiger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble. Shakespeare
If you draw your beast in an emblem, show a landscape of the country natural to the beast, as to the rhinoceros an East India landscape, the crocodile, an Egyptian. Peacham

RHOMB, n. s. [rhombe, French; rhombus, Latin; ῥόμβος.] In geometry, a parallelogram or quadrangular figure, having its four sides equal, and consisting of parallel lines, with two opposite angles acute, and two obtuse; it is formed by two equal and right cones joined together at their base. Trevoux and Harris

Save the sun his labour, and that swift Nocturnal and diurnal rhomb suppos'd
Invisible else above all stars, the wheel
Of day and night. Milton

See how in warlike muster they appear,
In rhombs and wedges, and ball moons and wings Milton

RHOMBICK, adj. [from rhomb.] Shaped like a rhomb.

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; the asteria in form of a star, and the y are of a rhombick figure. Grew

RHOMBOID, n. s. [ῥομβοειδής; rhomboides, French.] A figure approaching to a rhomb.

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; and they are of a rhomboid figure; talk, of such as are rhomboid. Grew

RHOMBOIDAL, adj. [from rhomboid.] Approaching in shape to a rhomb.

Another rhomboidal telescope of a compressed form, had many others mixed round the middle of it. Woodward

RHUBARB, n. s. [ῥαβάρβα, Latin.] A medicinal root slightly purgative, referred by botanists to the dock.

What rhubarb, tenna, or what purgative drug Would scour these English hence? Shakespeare Having fixed the tontanel, I purged him with an infusion of rhubarb in small ale. Wife

RHYME, n. s. [ῥυμῆς; rhythme, Fr.]

1. A harmonical succession of sounds.

The youth with songs and rhymes:
Some dance, some hale the rope. Dante

2. The consonance of verses; the correspondence of the last sound of one verse to the last sound or syllable of another.
For rhyme the rudder is of verses,
With which like ships they steer their courses. Hudibras

Such was the news, indeed, but songs and rhymes
Prevail as much in these hard iron times;
As would a plump of trembling fowl, that rise
Against an eagle fensing from the skies. Dryden

It Cupid throws a single dart,
We make him wound the lover's heart;
But if he takes his bow and quiver,
'Tis fate he must transfix the liver;
For rhyme with reason may dispense,
And sound has right to govern sense. Prior

3. Poetry; a poem.
All his manly power it did disperse,
As he were warned, with enchanted rhymes,
That oftentimes he quak'd. Fairy Queen
Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme. Milton
Now sportive youth,
Carol incoadite rhythms with tuning notes,
And quaver inharmonious. Philips

4. A word of sound to answer to another word.
What wife means to gain it half thou chose?
Know, time and fortune both are made of prose.
Is thy ambition sweating for a rhyme,
Thou unambitious fool, at this late time? Young

RHYME or reason. Number or sense.
I was promis'd on a time,
To have reason for my rhyme;
But from that time unto this season,
I had neither rhyme nor reason. Spenser
The guiltiness of my mind drove the grooves of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fancied. Shakespeare

TO RHYME, v. n.
1. To agree in sound.
He was too warm on picking work to dwell,
But fagotted his potions as they tell,
And, if they rhim'd and rattled, all was well. Dry
2. To make verses.
These fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies favours, they do always reason themselves out again. Shakespeare
There march'd the bard and blockhead, side by side,
Who rhym'd for love, and patroniz'd for pride. Pope

RHYMER, n. s. [from rhyme.] One who makes rhymes; a versifier; a poet in contempt.
Scall'd rhymers will ballad us out o' time. Shak

It was made pend to the English, to permit the Tull to graze upon their lands, to entertain any of their minstrels, rhymers, or news-tellers. Davies
Rhymers come on, and do the worst you can;
I fear not you, nor yet a better man. Dryden Milton's rhyme is constrained at an age, when the passion of love makes every man a rhymers, though not a poet. Dryden
I speak of those who are only rhymers. Dennis

RHYTHMICAL, adj. [ῥυθμικός; rhythmique, French; from rhyme or rhythm.] Harmonical; having one sound proportioned to another.

RIB, n. s. [iubbe, Saxon.]
1. A bone in the body.
Of these there are twenty-four in number, viz.
twelve on each side the twelve vertebrae of the back, they are segments of a circle; they grow flat and broad, as they approach the sternum; but the nearer they are to the vertebrae, the rounder and thicker they are; at which end they have a round head, which, being covered with a cartilage, is received into the sinus in the bodies of the vertebrae: the ribs, thus articulated, make an acute angle with the lower vertebrae: the ribs have each a small canal or sinus, which runs along their under sides, in which lies a nerve, vein, and artery: the extremities which are fastened to the sternum, are cartilaginous, and the cartilages make an obtuse angle with the bony part of the ribs; this angle respects the head: the cartilages are harder in women than in men, that they may better bear the weight of their breasts: the ribs are of two sorts; the seven upper are called true ribs, because their cartilaginous ends are received into the sinus of the sternum: the five lower are called false ribs, because they are softer and shorter, of which only the first is joined to the extremity of the sternum the cartilaginous extremities of the rest being tied to one another, and thereby leaving a greater space for the dilatation of the stomach and intestines: the last of these short ribs is shorter than all the rest, it is not tied to them, but sometimes to the musclic obliquus descendens. Quincy

Why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the ulc of nature? Shakespeare

He open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib, with cordial spirits warm
And life blood streaming fresh. Milton
Sure he, who first the passage try'd,
In harden'd oak his heart did hide,
And ribs of iron arm'd his side. Dryden

2. Any piece of timber or other matter which strengthens the side.

I should not see the sandy hour glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats;
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in land,
Vailing his high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial. Shakespeare
The ships with shatter'd ribs scarce creep from the lens. Dryden

3. Any prominence running in lines: as the stalks of a leaf.

RIBALD, n. s. [ribault, French; ribaldo, Italian.] A loose, rough, mean, brutal wretch.

That lewd ribald, with vile lust advanced,
Laid first his filthy hands on virgin clean,
To spoil her dainty corse to fair and heaven. Spenser
Your ribald rag of Egypt,
The breeze upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoists sails, and flies. Shakespeare

The busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, has rous'd the ribald crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer. Shakespeare

Ne'er one sprig of laurel grac'd these ribalds,
From flathing Bentley down to piding Tibbalds. Lyce

RIBALDRY, n. s. [from ribald; ribaud, old French.] Mean, lewd, brutal language.

Mr. Cowley asserts, that obscenity has no place in wit; Buckingham says, 'tis an ill sort of wit, which has nothing more to support it than base faced ribaldry. Dryden

The ribaldry of the low characters is diverse;
the reeve, miller, and cook are distinguished from each other. Dryden

In the same antique loom these scenes were wrought,

Embellish'd with good morals and just thought,
True nature in her noblest light you see,
Ere yet debauch'd by modern gallantry
To trifling jests and tinsome ribaldry. Granville

If the outward profession of religion were once in practice among men in office, the clergy would see their duty and interest in qualifying themselves for lay-conversation, when once they were out of fear of being choaked by ribaldry or prophaneities. Deft

RIBAND, n. s. [rubande, ruban, French.] This word is sometimes written ribon.

A fillet of silk; a narrow web of silk, which is worn for ornament.

Quant in green, she shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribbands pendent, tarmg 'bout her head. Shakespeare

A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose. Dryden

See! in the lists they wait the trumpet's sound;
Some love device is wrought on ev'ry sword,
And ev'ry riband bears some mythick word. Giles

RIBBED, adj. [from rib.]

1. Furnished with ribs.

Was I by rocks engender'd; rib'd with steel?
Such tortures to resist, or not to feel?
Hung on each bough a single leaf appears,
Which thrivell'd in its infancy remains,
Like a cloud's fan, not stretch'd wide its veins,
But as the seasons in their circle run,
Opens its rib'd surface to the nearer sun. Gay.

2. Enclosed as the body by ribs.

Remember
The nat'ral beauty of your ile, which stands
As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in
With rocks uncalceable, and roaring waters. Shak.

3. Marked with protuberant lines.

RIBBON, n. f. See RIBBAND.

TO RIBBROAST, v. n. [rib and roast.] To beat foundly. A burlesque word.

That done, he rises, humbly bows,
And gives thanks for the princely blows;
Depths not meanly proud, and boasting
Of his magnificent ribbroasting
I have been pinched in flesh, and well ribbroasted under my former masters; but I'm in now for skin and all. L'Estrange.

RIBWORT, n. f. [plantago.] A plant.

RIC, denotes a powerful, rich, or valiant man: as in these verses of Fortunatus:

*Hilperice potens, si interpres barbarus
adjit,
Adjutor furtis hoc quoque nomen habet.
Hilperic barbarians a stout helper term.
So Africa is altogether strong; Æthelric, nobly strong or powerful: to the same sense as Polycrates, Crato, Plutarchus, Opimus. Gibbon's Camden.*

RICE, n. f. [oryza, Lat.] One of the efulent grains: it hath its grains disposed into a pumelo, which are almost of an oval figure, and are covered with a thick husk, somewhat like barley: this grain is cultivated in most of the eastern countries. Miller.

Rice is the food of two thirds of mankind: it is kindly to human constitution, proper for the con-fumptive, and those subject to hæmorrhages.

If the snuff get out of the snuffers, it may fall into a dish of rice milk. Swift.

RICH, adj. [riche, Fr. ricco, Ital. rica,
Saxon.]

1. Wealthy; abounding in wealth; abounding in money or possessions; opulent; opposed to poor.

Law as rich in having such a jewel,
As twenty fees, it all their feud were pearl. Shak.
The rich shall not give more, and the poor no less. Isidore.

A thief bent to unboard the cash
Of some rich burgher. Milton.

Rich was his soul, though his attire was poor,
As heav'n had cloth'd his own ambassador. Dryd.
Several nations of the Americans are rich in land, and poor in all the comforts of life. Locke.

He may look upon the rich as benefactors, who have beautified the prospect all around him. Scd.

2. Valuable; estimable; precious; splendid; sumptuous.

Earth, in her rich attire,
Consume lovely guilt. Milton.

Mistress never was meanly dress'd in her life;
and nothing pleases her in dress, but that which is very rich and beautiful to the eye. Law.

3. Having any ingredients or qualities in a great quantity or degree.

So we th' Arabian could do know
At distance, when the spices blow,
By the rich odour taught to fear,
Though neither day nor star appear.
If life be short, it shall be glorious,
Each minute shall be rich in some great action. Rowe.

Sauces and rich spices are fetched from India.
Haber.

4. Fertile; fruitful.

There are, who fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold on their ill-natur'd land Induce. Philips.

5. Abundant; plentiful.

The gorgeous East with richest hand
Pours on her sons barbaric pearl and gold. Milt.

6. Abounding; plentifully stocked: as, pastures rich in flocks.

7. Having something precious.
Groves whose rich trees wept odorous gums and balm. Milton.

RICHED, adj. [from rich.] Enriched.
Obsolete.

Of all these bounds,
With shadowy forests, and with champions rich'd,
With plenteous rivers and wide skated meads,
We make thee lady. Shakespeare.

RICHES, n. f. [richesse, French.]

1. Wealth; money or possessions.
The infirmity of riches to charity has rendered it necessary by laws to secure property.
Hammond.

Chemists seek riches by transmutation and the great elixir. Spratt.
Riches do not consist in having more gold and silver, but in having more in proportion than our neighbours, whereby we are enabled to procure to ourselves a greater plenty of the conveniences of life, than comes within their reach, who, wanting the gold and silver of the world in a less proportion, want the means of plenty and power, and so are poorer. Locke.

What riches give us, let us first enquire,
Meat, fire, and cloaths, what more? meat, cloaths, and fire. Pope.

2. Splendid sumptuous appearance.

The riches of heav'n's pavement, trodden gold.
Milton.

RICHLY, adv. [from rich.]

1. With riches; wealthily; splendidly; magnificently.

In Belmont is a lady richly left,
And she is fair, of wondrous virtues. Shakespeare.
Women richly gay in gear? Milton.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.
In animals, some faculties are found more richly than in plants. Brown.

After a man has studied the laws of England, the reading the reports of adjudged cases will richly improve him. Harris.

3. Truly; abundantly. An ironical use.
There is such licentiousness among the bulk of the people, that one would not be sorry to see them bestowing upon one another a chastisement, which they to riches deliver. Addison.

RICHNESS, n. f. [from rich.]

1. Opulence; wealth.

Of virtue you have left proof to the world,
And virtue is grateful with beauty and richness adorn'd. Sudney.

2. Finery; splendour.

3. Fertility; fecundity; fruitfulness.

This town is famous for the richness of the soil.
Addison.

4. Abundance or perfection of any quality.
I amused myself with the richness and variety of colours in the western part of heaven. Spectator.

5. Pampering qualities.

The lively tincture of whose gushing blood
Should clearly prove the richness of his food. Dryden.

RICK, n. f. See RICKS.

1. A pile of corn or hay regularly heaped up in the open field, and sheltered from wet.

An inundation
O'erflow'd a farmer's barn and stable;
Whole ricks of hay and stacks of corn
Were down the sudden current born. Swift.
Mice and rats do great injuries in the field,
houses, barns, and corn ricks. Martinet.

2. A heap of corn or hay piled by the gatherer.

In the north they bind them up in small bundles and make small ricks of them in the field. Martinet.

RICKETS, n. f. [rachitis, Latin. A name given to the distemper at its first appearance by Gibson.] A distemper in children, from an unequal distribution of nourishment, whereby the joints grow knotty, and the limbs uneven: its cure is performed by evacuation and friction.

Quincy.
In some years, liver-grown, spleen, and rickets are put altogether, by reason of their likeness.

Quincy.
O were my pupil fairly knock'd o' th' head,
I should possess th' estate, if he were dead;
He's to be gone with the rickets and th' evil,
That one small dole will tend him to the devil. Dryden.

So when at school we first de-claim,
Old Lufky wags us in a theme,
Whose props support our infant vein,
And help the rickets in the brain,
But when our tools their force elude,
Our thoughts grow up to wit's estate. Prior.

RICKETY, adj. [from rickets.] Diseased with the rickets.

In a young animal, when the solids are too lax, the cure of rickety children, the diet should be gently stringent. Arbutnot.

RICTURE, n. f. [rictura, Lat.] A gaping.
Diet.

RID, The preterit of ride.

TO RID, v. a. [from hpebban, Saxon. In the pret. perhaps ridden or rid; in the passive participle rid.]

1. To let free; to redeem.
It is he that delivereth me from my cruel enemies; thou that rid me from the wicked man. Psalms.

Rid me, and deliver me out of great waters.
Psalms.

I will bring you out from under their burthens, and rid you out of their bondage. Isaiah.

2. To clear; to disencumber.

They were not before so willing to be rid of their learned tutor, as now importunate to obtain him again from them, who had given him entertainment. Hobbes.

I must rid all the fess of piracies. Shakespeare.
We'll use his countenance, which being done,
Let her, who would be rid of him, devise His speedy taking out. Shakespeare.

Upon the wind, fleet forth
Three of thy crew, to rid thee of that care. Ben Jonson.

I can put on Thy terrors, as I put thy mildness on,
Image of thee in all things; and shall soon,
Arm'd with thy might, rid heav'n of these rebell'd.
Milton.

Did faints for this bring in their plate;
For when they thought the cause had need on't,
Happy was he that could be rid on't. Hudibras.
The god usually till he slept again,
Betwixt at once to rid himself of pain. Dryden.

The greater visible good does not always ratio men's desire, in proportion to the greatness it appears to have, though every little trouble moves us, and it is on work to get rid of it. Locke.

The ladies asked whether we believed that the men of any town would, at the same conjuncture, have laden themselves with their wives, or rather, whether they would not have been glad of such an opportunity to get rid of them? Addison.

3. To dispatch.

Having the best at Barnet field,
We'll rather fling, for willingness rid's away. Shakespeare.

4. To drive away; to remove by violence;
to destroy.

An deathmen! you have rid this sweet young prince. Shakespeare.

RIDDANCE, n. f. [from rid.]

1. Deliverance.

Deliverance from sudden death, riddance from evil adversity, and the extent of saving mercy towards all men. Hooker.

2. Disencumbrance; less of something one is glad to lose.

I have too griev'd a heart

To take a tedious leave: thus losers part.

—A gentle riddance.

By this, the cock had a good riddance of his rival. Shakespeare.

L'Estrange.

3. Act of clearing away any encumbrances.

Those blossoms, and those dropping gums,

That he bestrown, unlighty and unsmooth,

Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease. Milton.

RIDDANCE. The participle of ride.

He could never have ridden out an eternal period, but it must be by a more powerful being than himself. Hale.

RIDDLE. n. f. [ræbels, Saxon; from ræbe, counsel, perhaps a trial of wit.]

1. An enigma; a puzzling question; a dark problem.

How did you dare

To trade and traffick with Macbeth,

In riddles and in charms of death? Shakespeare.

The Theban monster, that propos'd

Her riddle, and him, who solv'd it not, devour'd;

That once found out and solv'd, for grief and light

Cast herself headlong from the Theban steep. Milton.

2. Any thing puzzling.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady;

Not love, if any lov'd her: hey day!

So towards never use their might,

But against such as will not fight. Hudibras.

3. [hriddle, Saxon.] A coarse or open sieve.

Horle-beans and tares, sown together, are easily parted with a riddle. Mortimer.

To RIDDLE. v. a. [from the noun.]1. To solve; to unriddle. There is something of whimsical analogy between the two senses of the word riddle; as, we say, to lift a question: but their derivations differ.

Riddle me this, and guess him if you can,

Who bears a nation in a single man? Dryden.

2. To separate by a coarse sieve.

The finest sifted mould must be riddled in. Mortimer.

To RIDDLE. v. n. To speak ambiguously or obscurely.

Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;

Riddling confession hides but riddling truth. Shakspeare.

RIDDLINGLY. adv. [from riddle.] In the manner of a riddle; secretly.

Though like the pestilence and old-fashion'd love,

Riddlingly it catch men, and doth remove

Never, till it be starv'd out, yet their state

Is poor. Donne.

To RIDE. v. n. pret. rid or rode; part. rid or ridden. [ridan, Saxon; rijden, Dutch.]

1. To travel on horseback.

Brutus and Cælius

Are rid, like madmen, through the gates of Rome. Shakspeare.

Were you but riding forth to air yourself,

Such putting were too petty. Shakspeare.

Am not I thine as, upon which thou hast ridden? Nambers.

Through storms of smoke and adverse fire he rides,

While every shot is levell'd at his sides. Smith.

Let your master ride on before, and do you gallop after him. Swift.

2. To travel in a vehicle; to be born, not to walk.

Infected be the air whereon they ride. Shakspeare.

Upon this chaos rid the distressed ark, that bore the small remains of mankind. Burnet.

3. To be supported in motion.

As venerable Woden, battl'd in river,

Should with a bond of air, strong as the oak-tree

On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian dare

To his experienc'd tongue. Shakspeare.

4. To manage a horse.

Skill to ride seems a science,

Proper to gentle blood; some other feign,

To manage steeds, as did this vaunter; but in vain. Spenser.

The horses I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished. Shakspeare.

Inspir'd by love, whose business is to please,

He rode, he fenc'd, he mov'd with graceful ease. Dryden.

5. To be on the water.

On the western coast

Rideth a puissant army. Shakspeare.

The sea was grown so rough, that the admiral was not able longer to ride it out with his gallees;

but was enforced to slip his anchors, and run his gallees on ground. Kneller.

They were then in a place to be aided by their flups, which rode near in Edinburgh Fath. Hayward.

Waiting him his royal fleet did ride,

and willing winds to their low'r'd sails deny'd. Dryden.

Men once walk'd where ships at anchor ride. Dryden.

Now on their coasts our conquering navy rides,

Way-lays their merchants, and their land besets. Dryden.

6. To be supported by something subservient.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,

Whose nature is so far from doing harms,

That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty

My practices rid easy. Shakspeare.

To RIDE. v. a.

1. To sit on so as to be carried.

They ride the air in whirlwind. Milton.

2. To manage insolently at will.

Humility does not make us servile or insensible, nor oblige us to be ridden at the pleasure of every coxcomb. Cotter.

The nobility could no longer endure to be ridden

by bakers, cobblers, and brewers. Swift.

RIDER. n. f. [from ride.]

1. One who is carried on a horse or in a vehicle.

The strong camel and the generous horse,

Retrain'd and aw'd by man's inferior force,

Do to the riders' will their rage submit.

And answer to the spur, and own the bit. Prior.

2. One who manages or breaks horses.

His hutes are bred better; and to that end riders dearly hired. Shakspeare.

I would with jockies from Newmarket dine,

And to rough riders give my choicest wine. Bransford.

3. An inserted leaf.

RIDGE. n. f. [hrugg, Saxon; rig, Danish;

rugge, Dutch, the back.]

1. The top of the back.

He thought it was no time to flay;

But in a trace advanc'd the knight

Upon the bare ridge bolt upright. Hudibras.

2. The rough top of any thing, resembling the vertebrae of the back.

As when a vulture on Imans bred,

Whose snowy ridge the roving Tartar bounds,

Dilodges from a region scarce of prey. Milton.

His sons

What the Silesian vigour unwithstood
Could do in rigid fight. Philips

RIGIDITY. n. f. [rigidité, Fr. from rigid.]

1. Stiffness.

Rigidity is said of the solids of the body, when, being soft or impliable, they cannot readily perform their respective offices; but a fibre is said to be rigid, when its parts so strongly cohere together, as not to yield to that action of the fluids, which ought to overcome their resistance, in order to the preservation of health; it is to be remedied by tonics.

Rigidity of the organs is such a state as makes them resist that expansion, which is necessary to carry on the vital functions; rigidity of the vessels and organs must necessarily follow from the rigidity of the fibres. Arbuthnot.

2. Stiffness of appearance; want of easy or airy elegance.

This severe observation of nature, by the one in her commonness, and by the other in her absolute forms, must needs produce in both a kind of rigidity, and consequently more naturalness than gracefulness. Watson.

The rest his look

Bound with Gorgonian rigour, not to move. Milt.

2. A convulsive shuddering with sense of cold.

Rigors, chills, and a fever attend every such new supposition. Blackmore.

A right regimen, during the rigor or cold fit in the beginning of a fever, is of great importance; a long continued rigor is a sign of a strong disease; during the rigor, the circulation is less quick, and the blood actually stagnates in the extremities, and, pressing upon the heart, may produce concretions; therefore a rigor increaseth an inflammation. Arbuthnot.

3. Severity; sternness; want of condescension to others.

Nature has got the victory over passion, all his rigour is turned to grief and pity. Denham.

Rigour makes it difficult for fading virtue to recover. Clarissa.

4. Severity of life; voluntary pain; austerity.

He resumed his rigors, esteeming this calamity such a one as should not be outlived, but that it became men to be martyrs to. Fell.

VOL. II.

R I M

This prince lived in this convent, with all the rigor and austerity of a capuchin. Addison.

5. Strictness; unabated exactness.

It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be relaxed, rather than all men always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof. Hooker.

Heat and cold are rigor, according to philosophical rigor, the efficient, but are names expressing our passions. Glaucone.

The base degenerate age requires Severity and justice in its rigor.

This was an impious bold offending world. Addison.

6. Rage; cruelty; fury.

He at his toe with furious rigor smites,

That strongest oak might seem to overthrow;

The stroke upon his shield to heavy lights,

That to the ground it doubleth him full low. Spenser.

Driven by the necessities of the times, and the temper of the people, more than led by his own disposition to any height and rigor of actions. King Charles.

7. Hardness; not flexibility; solidity; not softness.

The stones the rigor of their kind expel,
And supple into softness as they fell. Dryden.

RIGOROUS. adj. [from rigor.]

1. Severe; allowing no abatement.

He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock
With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall from him further trial,
Than the severity of public power. Shakespeare.

Are these terms hard and rigorous, beyond our capacities to perform? Rogers.

2. Exact; scrupulously nice; as, a rigorous demonstration; a rigorous definition.

RIGOROUSLY. adv. [from rigorous.]

1. Severely; without tenderness or mitigation.

Left they faint

At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd,

For I behold them bit'n'd, and with tears

Bewailing their excess, all terror hide. Milton.

The people would examine his works more rigorously than himself, and would not forgive the least mistake. Dryden.

2. Exactly; scrupulously; nicely.

RILL. n. f. [rivulus, Lat.] A small brook; a little streamlet.

May thy hummed waves from this

Their full tribute never miss,

From a thousand petty rills, Milton.

That tumble down the snowy hills.

On every thorn delightful wisdom grows,

In every rill a sweet instruction flows,

But some untought, o'erhear the whistling rill,

In spite of sacred lecture blockheads fill. Young.

TO RILL. v. n. [from the noun.] To run in small streams.

From us to them can pay your haste
With no such object, and salute your rise
With no such wonder, as De Mornay's eyes. Waller.

7. Increase in any respect.

8. Increase of price.

Upon a breach with Spain, must be considered the present state of the king's treasure, the rise or fall that may happen in his constant revenue by a Spanish war. Temple.

The bishops have had there in the gradual rise of hands. Swift.

9. Beginning; original.

It has its rise from the lazy admonitions of those who give rules, and propole examples, without joining practice with their instructions. Locke.

All wickedness taketh its rise from the heart, and the design and intention with which a thing is done, frequently discriminates the goodness or evil of the action. Nelson.

His reputation quickly peopled it, and gave rise to the republic, which calls itself after his name. Addison.

10. Elevation; increase of sound.

In the ordinary rises and falls of the voice, there fall out to be two become between the unison and the disson. Bacon.

R'aint. The part of To rise.

R'iser. n. f. [from rise.] One that rises.

R I V

The life Eve, where the palace stands

Of the early riser, with the rosy hands,

Active Aurora; where the loves to dance. Chapman.

RISIBILITY. n. f. [from risible.] The quality of laughing.

How comes lowliness of stile to be so much the propriety of satyr, that without it a poet can be no more a satyr, than without risibility he can be a man. Dryden.

Whatever the philosophers may talk of their risibility, nothing is a more noble expression than laughing. Arbuthnot.

RISIBLE. adj. [risible, Fr. risibilis, Lat.]

1. Having the faculty or power of laughing.

We are in a merry world, laughing is our business; as it, because it has been made the definition of man that he is risible, his manhood consisted in nothing else. Government of the Tongue.

2. Ridiculous; exciting laughter.

RISK. n. f. [risque, Fr. riesgo, Spanish.]

Hazard; danger; chance of harm.

Some run the risk of an absolute ruin for the gaining of a present supply. Estrange.

When an insolent despot of discipline, nurtured into contempt of all order by a long risk of licence, shall appear before a church governor, it verily and resolution are that governor's virtue. South.

By allowing himself in what is innocent, he would run the risk of being betrayed into what is not so. Atterbury.

An innocent man ought not to run an equal risk with a guilty one. Clayton.

To RISK. v. a. [risquer, Fr.] To hazard;

to put to chance; to endanger.

Who would hope new fame to taste,

Or risk his well-established praise,
That his high genius to approve,
Had drawn a George or car'd a love? Addison.

RISKER. n. f. [from risk.] He who risks.

He thither came, to observe and imoak

What courtes other rykers took. Butler.

RISS. The obsolete preterit of rise.

Ris not the consular men and left their places,
So soon as thou sat fit down; and fled thy side? Ben Jonson.

RITE. n. f. [rit, Fr. ritus, Lat.] Solemn act of religion; external observance.

The ceremonies we have taken from such as were before us, are not things that belong to this or that sect, but they are the ancient rites and customs of the church. Hooker.

It is by God consecrated into a sacrament, a holy rite, a means of conveying to the worthy receiver the benefits of the body and blood of Christ. Hammond.

When the prince her funeral rites had paid,

He plow'd the Tyrrhene seas. Dryden.

RITUAL. adj. [rituel, Fr.] Solemnly ceremonious; done according to some religious institution.

Instant I bade the priests prepare

The ritual sacrifice, and solemn pray'r. Prior.

It to tradition were added, certain constant ritual and emblematical observances, as the emblems were expressive, the memory of the thing recorded would remain. Forbes.

RITUAL. n. f. [from the adjective.] A book in which the rites and observances of religion are set down.

An heathen ritual could not instruct a man better than these several pieces of antiquity in the particular ceremonies, that attended different sacrifices. Addison.

RITUALIST. n. f. [from ritual.] One skilled in the ritual.

RIVAGE. n. f. [Fr.] A bank; a coast.

Not in use.

Think
You stand upon the rivage, and behold
A city on th' incessant billows dancing;
For to appear this fleet. Shakespeare.

RIVAL. n. f. [rivalis, Latin.]

1. One who is in pursuit of the same thing which another man pursues; a competitor.

R I V

Oh love! thou sternly dost thy pow'r maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.

2. A competitor in love.

She saw her father was grown her adverse party, and yet her fortune such as she must favour her rival. Sidney.

France and Burgundy,

Great rivals in our younger daughter's love. Shak.

Your rival's image in your worth I view;

And what I lov'd in him, esteem in you. Marvell.

RIVAL. adj. Standing in competition;

making the same claim; emulous.

Had I but the means

To hold a rival place with one of them,
I should be fortunate. Shakespeare.

Equal in years, and rival in renown

With Epaphus, the youthful Phaeton

Lake honour claims. Dryden.

You bark to be employ'd,

While Venus is by rival dogs enjoy'd. Dryden.

To RIVAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stand in competition with another;

to oppose.

Those, that have been raised by the interest of some great minister, trample upon the steps by which they rise, to rival him in his greatness, and at length step into his place. South.

2. To emulate; to endeavour to equal or excel.

Ambitious fool! with horny hoofs to pass

O'er hollow arches of resounding bruis;

To rival thunder in its rapid course,

And imitate immutable force. Dryden.

O thou, too great to rival or to praise,

Forgive, lamented shade, these duteous lays.

Lee had thy fire, and Congress had thy wit,

And copyists, here and there, some likeness hit;

But none possess'd thy graces, and thy ease;

In thee alone 'twas natural to please! Hart.

To RIVAL. v. a. To be competitors. Out of use.

Burgundy,

We first address'd toward you, who with the king

Have rival'd for our daughter. Shakespeare.

RIVALITY. n. f. [rivalitas, Lat. from RIVALRY. n. f. [rival, Lat.] Competition, emulation.

It is the privilege of posterity to set matters right between those antagonists, who, by their rival-ties, divided a whole age. Addison.

RIVALSHIP. n. f. [from rival.] The state or character of a rival.

To RIVE. v. a. pret. rived; part. riven.

[ryt, broken, Saxon; riven, Dutch;

raver, French, to drive.] To split;

to cleave; to divide by a blunt instrument,

to force in disruption.

At his haughty helmet

So hugely struck, that it the heel did rive.

And cleit his head. Spenser.

The varlet at his plant was grieved sore,

That his deep wounded heart in two did rive. Spenser.

Through riven clouds and molten firmament,

The fierce three-looked engine making way,

Both lofty towers and highest trees hath rent. Spenser.

O Cicero!

I have seen tempests, when the foulding winds

Have riv'd the knotty oaks; but ne'er till now

Did I go through a tempest dropping fire. Shak.

As one he fit od escap'd from cruel fight.

Sore toil'd, his riven arms to havock heavn. Milnes.

The neighbouring forests, formerly shaken and riven with the thunder-bolts of war, did envy the sweet peace of Drama. South.

Had I not been blind, I might have seen

You riven oak, the turret of the green. Dryden.

Let it come;

Let the fierce light'ning blast, the thunder rive me.

To RIVE. v. a. To be split; to be divided by violence.

R I V

Proflava rivis, fluit, and breaks in any direction.

To RIVE, for derive or direct. Not used.

Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament,
To rise their dangerous artillery

Upon no christian foul but English Talbot. Shaksp.
To RIVEL. v. a. [scumpled, Sax. corrugated, rumpel'd.] To contract into wrinkles and corrugations.

Then droop'd the fading flow'rs, their beauty fled,

And clos'd their sickly eyes and hung the head,
And rivet'd up with heat, lay dying in their bed.

Dryden.

And since that plenteous autumn now is past,
Whole grapes and peaches have indulg'd your taste,

Take in good part, from our poor poet's board,
Such rivet'd fruits as winter can afford. Dryden.

Alum sticks, with contracting pow'r,
Shrink his thin efface like a rivet'd flow'r.

Pope.

RIVEN. The part of river.

RIVER n. f. [riviere, Fr. rivus, Lat.]

A land current of water bigger than a brook.

It is a most beautiful country, being stored throughout with many goodly rivers, replenished with all sorts of fish. Spenser.

The first of these rivers has been celebrated by the Latin poets for the gentleness of its course, as the other for its rapidity. Addison.

RIVER-DRAGON. n. f. A crocodile. A name given by Milton to the king of Egypt.

Thus with ten wounds

The river-dragon tau'd at length, submits
To let his sojourners depart. Paradise Lost.

RIVERET. n. f. [diminutive of river.] A small stream; a rill.

Bringing all their riverets in,
There ends; a new song to begin. Drayton.

Calls down riveret from her springs,
Their queen upon her way to bring. Drayton.

RIVER-GOD. n. f. Tutelary deity of a river.

His wig hung as frail as the hair of a river-god
Shag from the water. Asbuthnot.

RIVER-HORSE. n. f. Hippopotamus.

Rois,

As plants ambiguous between sea and land,
The river-horse and scaly crocodile. Milton.

RIVER. n. f. [river, Fr. to break the point of a thing; to drive.] A fastening pin clenched at both ends.

The amours accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers clothing rivets up
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakspere.

Thy armour

I'll fasten, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it. Shakspere.

Though Valeria's fair, and though she loves me too,

'Gainst her my soul is arm'd on every part;
Yet there are secret rivets to my heart,

Where Berenice's charms have found the way,
Subtle as lightnings. Dryden.

The verse in fashion is, when numbers flow
So smooth and equal, that no light can find
The rivet, where the polish'd piece was join'd.

Dryden.

The rivets of those wings incline'd Fit not each other. Dryden.

This instrument should move easy upon the rivet.

Shaksp.

To RIVET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with rivets.

I has man,

Mail our fire were out, would fetch down new
Out of the hand of Jove; and rivet him

To Caucasus should be but frown. Ben Jonson.

2. To fasten strongly; to make immovable.

You were to blame to part with
A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger,
And rivet'd with oath unto your flesh. Shaksp.

R O A

Why should I write this down, that's rivetted, Scow'd to my memory? Shakspere.

What one party thought to rivet so a settledness
by the influence of the Scots, that the other rejected.

King Charles.

Till fortune's fustle & spite had made it known,
Her blows not shook but rivetted his throne. Dryden.

Thus hath God not only rivetted the notion of himself into our natures, but likewise made the belief of his being, necessary to the peace of our minds and happiness of society. Tillotson.

In the eye lies those things rivetted which are loose, where will you begin to rectify the mistake?

Locke.

Where we use words of a loose and wandering signification, hence follows mistake and error, which those maxims, brought as proofs to establish propositions, wherein the terms stand for undetermined ideas, do by their authority confirm and rivet.

Locke.

Rivet and nail me where I stand, ye pow'rs!
Congress.

They provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Addison.

A similitude of nature and manners, in such a degree as we are capable of, must tie the holy knot, and rivet the friendship between us. Atterbury.

3. To drive or clench a rivet.

In rivetting, the pin you rivet in should stand upright to the plate you rivet it upon; for if it do not stand upright, you will be forced to set it upright, after it is rivetted. Moxon.

RIVULET. n. f. [ravulus, Lat.] A small river; a brook; a streamlet.

By fountain or by shady rivulet,
He fought them. Milton.

The veins, where innumerable little rivulets have their confluence into the common channel of the blood. Boyle.

I saw the rivulet of Salsurata, formerly called Albula, and smelt the stench that rises from its water, which Martial mentions. Addison.

RINDOLLAR. n. f. A German coin, worth about four shillings and sixpence sterling.

Dict.

ROACH. n. f. [from rutulus, Lat. red-haired.]

A roach is a fish of no great reputation for his dainty taste: his spawn is accounted much better than any other part of him: he is accounted the water sheep, for his simplicity and foolishness, and it is noted, that roaches recover strength, and grow in a fortnight after spawning. Hutton.

If a gudgeon meet a roach,
He dare not venture to approach;
Yet still he leaps at flies. Swift.

ROAD. n. f. [rade, Fr. route, Fr. route is via trita.]

1. Large way; path.

Would you not think him a madman, who,
whilst he might easily ride on the beaten road way, should trouble himself with breaking up of gaps?

Suckling.

To God's eternal house direct the way,
A broad and ample road. Milton.

The liberal man dwells always in the road. Fell.

To be indifferent whether we embrace falsehood or truth, is the great road to error. Locke.

Could stupid atoms, with impetuous speed,
By dirt rent roads and adverse ways proceed,
That here they might encounter, here unite.

Philmore.

There is but one road by which to climb up.

Addison.

2. [rade, Fr.] Ground where ships may anchor.

I should be full

Peering in maps for ports and roads;
And every object that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures. Shakspere.

About the island are many roads, but only one harbour. Sandys.

3. Inroad; incursion.

The Volcians stand Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road Upon, again. Shakspere.

R O A

Caton was desirous of the spoil, for he was, by the former road into that country, famous and rich.

Knelley.

The king of Scotland, seeing none came in to Perkin, turned his enterprise into a road, and washed Northumberland with fire and sword. Bacon.

4. Journey. The word seems, in this sense at least, to be derived from rode,

the preterit of ride: as we say, a short ride; an easy ride.

With easy roads he came to Leicester,
And lodg'd in the abbey. Shakspere.

He from the east his flaming road begins.

Milton.

5. The act, or state of travelling.

Some taken from their shops and farms, others from their sports and pleasures, these at suits of law, those at gaming tables, some on the road, others at their own fire sides. Law.

To ROAM. v. n. [romigare, Italian. See Room.] To wander without any certain purpose; to ramble; to rove; to play the vagrant. It is imagined to come from the pretences of vagrants, who always said they were going to Rome.

Five summers have I spent in farthest Greece,
Roaming clean through the bounds of Asia.

Shakspere.

Daphne roaming through a thorny wood.

Shakspere.

The lonely fox roams far abroad,
On secret rumpie bent, and midnight fraud. Prior.

What were unenlighten'd man,
A savage roaming through the woods and wilds
In quest of prey. Thomson.

4. The sound of the wind or sea.
The roar
Of loud Euxine day. Philips.
5. Any loud noise.
Deep throated engines belch'd, whose roar
Impell'd with outrageous noise the air. Milton.
On a plat of rising ground,
I hear the far-off rattle found,
Over some wide-water'd shore,
Swinging slow with lullen roar. Milton.
When cannons did diffuse,
Preventing puffs, the terror, and the news;
Our neighbour princes trembled at their roar. Waller.
The waters, listening to the trumpet's roar,
Obey the summons, and forsake the shore. Dryden.
- ROARER. n. f. [from roar.] A noisy brutal man.
The English roarsers put down all. Houcl.

Air ripens not, nor earth produces;
Fire will not roast, nor water boil. Swift.
3. To dress at the fire without water.
In eggs boiled and roasted, there is scarce difference to be discerned. Bacon.
4. To heat any thing violently.
Roasted in wrath and fire,
He thus o'erheat'd with congregate gore,
Old Priam seeks. Shakespeare.
- ROAST, for roasted.
He lost his roast beef stomach, not being able to touch a sirlon. Addison.
And if Dan Congreve judges right,
Roast beef and ale make Priam's fight.
It warms the cook-maid, not to burn
The roast meat, which it cannot turn. Swift.
- TO RULE THE ROAST. To govern; to manage; to preside. It was perhaps originally roist, which signified a tumult, to direct the populace.
Where champions ruleth the roist,
There dastard disorder is moil. Tupper.
The new made duke, that rules the roist. Shakespeare.
- Alma flap dath, is all again
In ev'ry sinew, nerve, and vein;
Runs here and there, like Hamlet's ghost,
While every where it rules the roist. Prior.
- ROB. n. f. [I believe Arabic.] Insipidated juice.
The infusion, being evaporated to a thicker consistence, passeth into a jelly, rob. extract, which contain all the virtues of the infusion. Arbuthnot.

And, like a thief, to come to rob my grounds,
But thou wilt brave me with these sawcy terms? Shakespeare.
- Our fins being ripe, there was no preventing of God's justice from reaping that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity. King Charles.
- I have not here designed to rob him of any part of that commendation, which he has so justly acquired from the whole author, whose fragments only fall to my portion. Dryden.
- The water nymphs lament their empty urns, Perotia, rob'd of silver Dives, mourns. Addison.
2. To set free; to deprive of something bad. Ironical.
Our house is still, and thou a merry devil,
Didst rob it of some taste of tediousness. Shakespeare.
 3. To take away unlawfully.
Better be disdain'd of all, than fashion a carriage to rob love from any. Shakespeare.
Procure, that the nourishment may not be robbed and drawn away. Bacon.
Nor will I take from any man his due;
But thus assuming all, he robs from you. Dryden.
Oh double sacrilege on things divine,
To rob the relic, and deface the shrine! Dryden.
- ROBBER. n. f. [from rob.] One that plunders by force, or steals by secret means; a plunderer; a thief.
The hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accute thee, I'm your host,
With robbers hands, my hospitable favour
You should not rustle thus. Shakespeare.
Had'st thou not committed Notorious murder on those thirty men
At Acreton;
Then, like a robber, strip'd'st them of their robes. Milton.
- The robber must run, ride, and use all the desperate ways of escape; and probably, after all, his sin betrays him to the gaol, and from thence advances him to the gibbet. South.
- Old Proactheus did aspire,
And stole from heav'n the seeds of fire;
A train of ills, a ghastly crew,
The robber's blazing tract pursue. Dryden.

R O C

Though the rocks of Egypt break under the head of him that leans on them, yet the rock of Israel will be an everlasting stay. King Charles.
[rock, Danish; rocca, Italian; rucca, Spanish; spinrock, Dutch.] A distaff held in the hand, from which the wool was spun by twirling a ball below.

A leamed and a mainly foul
I purpos'd to : that should with even powers,
The rock, the spindle, and the sheers controul
Of destiny, and spin her own free hours. B. Jonson.
On the rock's scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn the wheel's space. Dryden.
Flow from the rock my flax, and swiftly flow,
Purise thy thread, the spindle runs below. Parrel.
To Rock, v. a. [rocquer, French.]

1. To thake; to move backward and forward.

It, by a quicker rocking of the engine, the locks were more swiftly shaken, it would, like water, vibrate to and fro. Boyle.

The wind was loud; the whisp'ring found
Was dumb; a rising earthquake rock'd the ground. Dryden.

A living tortoise; being turned upon its back, could help itself only by its neck and head, by pushing against the ground to rock itself as in a cradle, to find out the side towards which the inequality of the ground might more easily permit to roll its shell. Ray.

2. To move the cradle, in order to procure sleep.

Come, take hand with me,
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be. Shakespeare.

Leaning her head upon my breast,
My panting heart rock'd her asleep. Suckling.

My bloody resolutions,
Like sick and froward children,
Were rock'd asleep by reason. Devinham.

While his secret soul on Flanders preys,
He rocks the cradle of the babe of Spain. Dryden.

High in his hall, rock'd in a chain of state,
The king with his tempestuous council late. Dryden.

Ru'd all to pieces on thy rock's bottom. Shakespeare.

Ro'ck, n. f. [roede, Dutch.]

1. A long twig.

Some chose a hazle rod of the same year's shoot, and this they bind on to another straight stick of any wood, and walking lightly over those places, where they suspect the bowels of the earth to be enrich'd with metals, the wand will, by bowing towards it, discover it. Boyle.

2. A kind of sceptre.

Sh' had all the royal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,
The rod and bird of peace. Shakespeare.

The pastoral rod of Hermes, or his opiate staff. Milton.

O gentle sleep, I cry'd,
Why is thy gift to me alone deny'd?

Mildest of beings, friend to ev'ry clime,
Where lies my error, what has been my crime?

Beasts, birds, and cattle feel thy balm; my rod;
The drowsy mountains wave, and seem to nod:

The torrents cease to chide, the seas to roar,
And the built waves recline upon the shore. Haste.

3. Any thing long and slender.

Let the shepherd
Increase his tackle, and his rod rot. Gay.

Hail, ye Cyclops, with your forked rods,
This rebel love has won all the gods,
And every hour by love is made,
Some heaven defying Enchanted. Granville.

dimensions of buildings, and figured the same thing as pertain, taken as a measure of length. Arbutnot.

5. An instrument of correction, made of twigs tied together.

If he be but one to tickle idly roguing, he may punish him with stocks; but if he be found again for loitering, he may scourge him with whips or rods. Spenser.

I am whipt and scourg'd with rods,
Nettled, and stung with pincers, when I hear
Of olombrook. Shakespeare.

In this condition the rod of God hath a voice to be heard, and he, whose office it is, ought now to expound to the sick man the particular meaning of the voice. Hammond.

Grant me and my people the benefit of thy chastisements; that thy rod, as well as thy staff, may comfort us. King Charles.

They trembling learn to throw the fatal dart,
And under rods of rough centurions smart. Dryden.

As soon as that sentence is executed, these rods,

R O G

these instruments of divine discipline, are thrown into the fire. Atterbury.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod;
An honest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.

Rode, The pret. of ride.

He in paternal glory rode. Milton.

Rodomontade, n. f. [from a boastful boisterous hero of Ariosto, called Rodo- monte; rodomontade, French.] An empty noisy bluster or boast; a rant.

He only serves to be sport for his company;
for in these gamester days men will give him blats, which may put him upon his rodomontades.

Government of the Tongue.
The libertines of painting have no other model;
but a rodomontade genius, and very irregular, which violently hurries them away. Dryden.

He talks extravagantly in his passion, but if I would quote a hundred passages in Ben Jonson's Cethagus, I could show that the rodomontades of Almauzar are neither so irrational nor impossible, for Cethagus there means to destroy nature. Dryden.

To rodomontade, v. n. [from the noun.]
To brag thronomically; to boast like Rodomonte.

Ro'e, n. f. [na, na-beon, Saxon.]

Makes wing to the rooky wood. Shakespeare.

ROOM. n. f. [pnoe, Sax. rooms, Gothick.]

1. Space; extent of place great or small.

With new wonder, now he views,
To all delight of human sense expos'd
In narrow rooms, nature's whole wealth. Milton.
If you will have a young man to put his travels into a little room, and in that time gather much, this he must do. Bacon.

2. Space or place unoccupied.

The dry land is much too big for its inhabitants;
and that before they shall want room by encroaching and multiplying, there may be new heavens and a new earth. Bentley.

3. Way unobstructed.

Make room, and let him stand before our face. Shakespeare.
What train of servants, what extent of field,
Shall add the birth, or give him room to build? Cress.

This paternal regal power, being by divine right, leaves no room for human prudence to place it any where. Locke.

4. Place of another; read.

In evils, that cannot be removed without the manifest danger of greater to succeed in their removal, wisdom of necessity must give place to necessity. Hooker.

For better ends our kind Redeemer dy'd,
Or the fallen angels rooming will be but ill supply'd. Reformation

By contributing to the contentment of other men, and rendering them as happy as he is in our power, we do God's work, are in his place and room. Calaneo.

5. Unobstructed opportunity.

When this prince was in her father's court, she was so celebrated, that there was no prince in the empire, who had room for such an alliance, that was not ambitious of gaining her into his family. Addison.

It puts us upon to eager a pursuit of the advantages of life, so leaves no room to reflect on the great author of them. Atterbury.

6. Possible admission; possible mode.

Will you not look with pity on me?
Is there no hope? is there no room for pardon? A. Philips.

7. An apartment in a house; so much of a house as is enclosed within partitions.

I found the prince in the next room,
Waiting with kindly tears his gentle cheeks. Shakespeare.

If when she appears in th' room,
Thou dost not quake, and art struck dumb;
Know this,
Thou lov'st himself;
And to love true,
Thou must begin again, and love anew. Suckling.

In a prince's court, the only question a man is to ask is, whether he be the confidant of the court, or will of the prince, to be uncovered in some room and not in others. Stillingfleet.

It will afford me a few pleasant rooms, for such a friend as yourself. Pope.

ROOMAGE. n. f. [from room.] Space; place.

Man, of all sensible creatures, has the fullest brain to his proportion, for the lodging of the intellectual faculties: it must be a fluent character of hope, when there is good place of roomance and receipt, where those powers are housed. Watson.

ROOMINESS. n. f. [from rooming.] Space; quantity of extent.

ROOMY. adj. [from room.] Spacious; wide; large.

Which after-ages call Hybernian trout. Harte.

4. The original; the first cause.
The love of money is the root of all evil, is a truth universally agreed in. Temple.

5. The first ancestor.
It was said,
That myself should be the roots, and father
Of many kings. Shakespeare.

Why did my parents fend me to the schools,
That I with knowledge might enrich my mind?
Sure the desire to know hath made men fools,
And did corrupt the root of all mankind. Daniel.

Whence,
But from the author of all ill, could spring
So deep a malice, to contemn the race
Of mankind in one root. Milton.

They were the roots, out of which sprang two distinct people, under two distinct governments. Locke.

6. Fixed residence.

7. Impression; durable effect.
Having this way cased the church, as they thought, of superficiality, they went on till they had plucked up even those things also, which had taken a great deal stronger and deeper root. Hawker.

That love took deepest root, which first did grow. Dryden.

TO ROOT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fix the root; to strike far into the earth.

Her fallow lens
The dandel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon. Shakespeare.

Underneath the grove of fycamore,
That westward rooteth, did I see your son. Shakespeare.

The multiplying brood of the ungodly shall not take deep rooting from barked ships, nor lay any fast foundation. Hopson.

After a year's rooting, then shaking doth the tree good, by loosening of the earth. Bacon.

The cooler must be proportioned to the soil, because, in deep grounds, the weeds root the deeper. Montimer.

2. To turn up earth: as, the hog roots the garden.

3. To sink deep.
If any irregularity chanced to intervene, and cause misapprehensions, he gave them not leave to root and taden by concealment. Fell.

TO ROOT. v. a.

1. To fix deep in the earth.
When ocean, sun, and earth at once engage,
And note the torments fly before their rage,
At once the clashing clouds to battle move. Dryden.

Where the impetuous torrent rushing down,
Huge craggy fens, and rooted trees had thrown,
They lost their confers. Dryden.

2. To impress deeply.
The great important end that God designs it for, the government of mankind, faithfully shew the necessity of his being rooted deeply in the heart, and put beyond the danger of being torn up by any ordinary violence. South.

They have so rooted themselves in the opinions of their party, that they cannot hear an objection with patience. Watts.

3. To turn up out of the ground; to eradicate; to extirpate: with a particle, as out or up.

He's a rank weed,
And we must root him out. Shakespeare.

Soon shall we drive back Alcibiades,
Who, like a boar too savage, doth root up
His country's peace. Shakespeare.

The Egyptians think it fit to root up or to bite
Their locks or onions, which they serve with holy rite. Reland.

Root up wild olives from thy labour'd lands. Dryden.

The royal husbandman appear'd,
And plough'd, and sow'd, and till'd;
The thorns he rooted out, the rubbish clear'd,
And blest the obedient field. Dryden.

4. To destroy; to banish: with particles, Not to destroy, but root them out of heaven. Milton.

In vain we plant, we build, our stores increase,

S A B

S Has in English the same hissing sound as in other languages, and unhappily prevails in so many of our words that it produces in the ear of a foreigner a continued sibilation. In the beginning of words it has invariably its natural and genuine sound: in the middle it is sometimes uttered with a stronger appulse of the tongue to the palate, like z, as rose, reflate, rosy, offer, nosel, resident, busy, business. It sometimes keeps its natural sound; as loose, designation; for which I know not whether any rules can be given. In the end of monosyllables it is sometimes s, as in this; and sometimes z, as in as, hus; and generally where es stands, in verbs for eth, as gives. It seems to be established as a rule, that no noun singular should end with /ingle: therefore in words written with diphthongs, and naturally long, an e is nevertheless added at the end, as goose, house; and where the syllable is short the f is doubled, and was once se, as asse, anciently asse; wilderness, anciently wilderness; distress, anciently distresse.

SABOTH. n. f. [Hebrew.] Signifying an army.

Holy Lord God of sabbath; that is, Lord of hosts.

SABBATH. n. f. [An Hebrew word signifying rest; sabbat, Fr. sabbatum, Lat.]

1. A day appointed by God among the Jews, and from them established among Christians for publick worship; the seventh day set apart from works of labour to be employed in piety.

I purpose,
And by our holy sabbath have I sworn,
To have the due and forfeit of my bond. Shaksp.
Glad we return'd up to the coasts of light,
Free sabbath ev'ning. Milton.

Here ev'ry day was sabbath: only free
From hours of pray'r, for hours of charity,
Such as the Jews from servile toil releas'd,
Where works of mercy were a part of rest:
Such as blest angels exercise above,
Vary'd with sacred hymns and acts of love;
Such sabbaths as that one she now enjoys;
E'en that perpetual one, which she employs:
For such vicissitudes in heav'n there are,
In praise alternate, and alternate pray'r. Dryden.

2. Intermission of pain or sorrow; time of rest.

Never any sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel.
Nor can his blest soul look down from heav'n,
Or break the eternal sabbath of his rest,
To see her miseries on earth. Dryden.

Peaceful sleep out the sabbath of the tomb,
And wake to raptures in a life to come. Pope.

SACRAMENT. n. f. [sacrement, Fr. sacramentum, Lat.]

1. An oath; any ceremony producing an obligation.

2. An outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace.

As often as we mention a sacrament, it is improperly understood; for in the writings of the ancient fathers all articles which are peculiar to christian faith, all duties of religion containing that which sense or natural reason cannot of itself discern, are most commonly named sacraments; our restraint of this word to some few principal divine ceremonies, importeth in every such ceremony two things, the substance of the ceremony itself, which is visible; and besides that, somewhat else more secret, in reference whereunto we conceive that ceremony to be a sacrament. Hooker.

3. The eucharist; the holy communion.
 Ten thousand French have taken the sacrament To rive their dangerous artillery Upon no christian soul but English Talbot. Shakespeare.

As we have taken the sacrament, We will unite the white rose with the red. Shakespeare.

they become pot-herbs, and some of those plants which are pot-herbs in one family, are salad in another. Watts.

SALAMANDER, n. f. [salamandre, Fr.
salamandra, Latin] An animal supposed to live in the fire, and imagined to be very poisonous. Ambrose Parry has a picture of the salamander, with a receipt for her bite; but there is no such creature, the name being now given to a poor harmless insect.

The salamander lives in the fire, and hath force also to extinguish it. Bacon.

According to this hypothesis, the whole lunar world is a torrid zone, and may be supposed uninhabitable, except they are salamanders which dwell therein. Granville.

Whereas it is commonly said that a salamander extinguisheth fire, we have found by experience, that on hot coals it dies immediately. Brown.

The salamander was encompassed with fire and smoke, that one would have thought nothing but a salamander could have been late in such a situation.
Addison.

SALAMANDER'S Hair, n. f. A kind of SALAMANDER'S Wool, n. f. abetios, or mi-

SALMON, n. f. [salmo, Lat. salmon, Fr.] A fish.

The salmon is accounted the king of fresh-water fish, and is bred in rivers relating to the sea, yet far from it as admits no mixture of brackish water. He is said to cast his spawn in August. Long before that they dig a hole in a safe place in gravel, and there place their eggs or spawn, and the mother has done his natural office, and then cover it over with gravel and stones, and so leave to their Creator's protection; who, by a great heat which he infuses into that cold element makes it brood and beget life in the spawn, and become smollets early in the spring: they hatch the sea before winter, both the mother and spawn. — Sir Francis Bacon observes the age of a salmon exceeds not ten years. After he is got into the sea he becomes from a smollet, not to big as a gudgeon to be a salmon, in as short a time as a gudgeon becomes a goose. Water.

They spoke them with an instrument somewhat like the salmon spear. Carew.

The salsoacids help its passing off; as sal prunel. Fleur.

SALSUGINOUS, adj. [salugo, Lat.] Salubrious, somewhat salt.

The distinction of salts, whereby they are distinguished into acid, volatile, or saluginous, it may be said the fugitive salts of animal substances, and fixed or calcareous, may appear of much use in natural philosophy. Boyle.

SALT, n. f. [salt, Gothic; peas, Saxon; sal, Lat. sel, Fr.]

SALT is a body whose two essential properties seem to be, dissolubility in water, and a pungent sapor: it is an active incombustible substance: it gives all bodies consistence, and preserves them from corruption, and occasions all the variety of tastes. There are three kinds of salts, fixed, volatile, and essential; fixed salt is drawn by calcining the matter, then boiling the ashes in a good deal of water: after this the solution is filtrated, and all the moisture evaporated, when the salt remains in a dry form at the bottom: this is called a lixivious salt. Volatile salt is that drawn chiefly from the parts of animals, and some putrified parts of vegetables: it rises easily, and is the most volatile of any. The essential salt is drawn from the juice of plants by crystallization.

By the laws of men, enacted by civil power, gratitude is not enforced; that is, not enforced by the junction of penalties, to be inflicted upon the person that shall not be found grateful. South.

The sanctifications of the christian life, in its present practice and future hopes, are not the mere restorations of enthusiasm, as the trusted professors of reason have added the junction of their testimony. Watts.

This word is often made the sanction of an oath: it is reckoned a great commendation to be a man of honour. Swift.

Wanting function and authority, it is only yet a private work. Haller.

2. A law; a decree ratified. Improper.
'Tis the first junction nature gave to man,
Each other to assist in what they can. Denham.

SANCTITUDE. n. f. [from sanctus, Latin.] Holiness; goodness; faintness.
In their looks divine

The image of their glorious Maker shone, Truth, wisdom, sanctitude, serene and pure. Milton.

SANCTITY. n. f. [sanctitas, Latin.] 1. Holiness; the state of being holy.

At his touch,
Such sanctity hath Heaven given his hand,
They presently amend. Shakespeare.

God attributes to please

No sanctity, if none be thither brought
By men who there frequent. Milton.
2. Goodness; the quality of being good; purity; godliness.

This youth
I reliev'd with such sanctity of love,
And to his image, which methought did promise
Most venerable worth, did I devotion. Shakespeare.

It was an observation of the ancient Romans, that their empire had not more encreased by the strength of their arms than the sanctity of their manners. Addison.

3. Saint; holy being.
About him all the sanctities of heav'n stood thick as stars, and from his sight receiv'd beatitude pass'd utterance. Milton.

To SANCTUARISE. v. n. [from sanctuary.]

Having waste ground enough,
Shall we desire to raise the sanctuary,
And push our evils there? Shakespeare.

They often plac'd
Within his sanctuary itself their shrines. Milton.
Let it not be imagined, that they contribute nothing to the happiness of the country who only serve God in the duties of a holy life, who attend his sanctuary, and daily address his goodness. Rogers.

2. A place of protection; a sacred asylum; whence a sanctuary man, one who takes shelter in a holy place.

Come, my boy, we will to sanctuary. Shak.
I'll hence forthwith unto the sanctuary,
To save at least the heir of Edward's right. Shakespeare.

Often have I heard of sanctuary men;
But sanctuary children ne'er till now. Shakespeare.
He fled to Beverley, where he and divers of his company registered themselves sanctuary men. Bacon.

Howsoever the sanctuary man was protected from his creditors, yet his goods out of sanctuary should not. Bacon.

3. Shelter; protection.
What are the bulls to the frogs, or the lakes to the meadows? Very much, says the frog; for he that's worried will be sure to take sanctuary in the fens. L'Estrange.

The admirable works of painting were made fuel for the fire; but some reliques of it took sanctuary under ground, and escaped the common destiny. Dryden.

SAND. n. f. [sand, Danish and Dutch.]

1. Particles of stone not conjoined, or stone broken to powder.
That finer matter call'd sand, is no other than very small pebbles. Woodward.

Here 't' th' sands
There I'll rake up, the post unsanctified. Shaksp.
Hark, the fatal followers do pursue!
The sands are number'd that make up my life:
Here must I stay, and here my life must end. Shakespeare.

Sand hath always its root in clay, and there be no veins of sand any great depth within the earth. Bacon.

Calling for more paper to referibe, king Philip shewed him the difference betwixt the ink box and sand box. Howel.

If quicksilver be put into a convenient glass vessel, and that vessel exactly stopp'd, and kept for ten weeks in a sand furnace, whose heat may be constant, the corpuscles that constitute the quicksilver will, after innumerable revolutions, be so connected to one another, that they will appear in the form of a red powder. Boyle.

Engag'd with money bags, as bold
As men with sand bags did of old. Hudibras.

The force of water casts gold out from the bowels of mountains, and exposes it among the sands of rivers. Dryden.

Shells are found in the great sand pit at Wood-wich. Woodward.

Celia and I, the other day,
Walk'd o'er the sand hills to the sea. Prior.

2. Barren country covered with sands.
Most of his army being slain, he, with a few of his friends, fought to save themselves by flight over the desert sands. Kneller.

Her sons spread Beneath Gibraltar to the Libyan sands. Milton.

So, where our wild Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden the impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away.
The helpless traveller, with wild surprise,
Sees the dry desert all around him rise,
And smother'd in the dusty whirlwind dies. Addison.

SAN'DAL. n. f. [sandale, Fr. sandalum, Lat.] A loaf shoe.

Thus sang the meadow swain to th' oaks and rills
While the full moon went out with sandals grey. Milnes.

From his robo
Flows light ineffable: his harp, his quiver,
And Lycian bow are gold with golden sandals His feet are shod. Prior.

The sandals of celestial mold,
Fledg'd with ambrosial plumes, and rich with gold;
Surround her feet. Pope.

SANO. n. The preterit of sing.

Then sang Moses and Israel this song unto the Lord. Exodus

These next they sang, of all creation first. Milton.

SANGUIFEROUS. adj. [sanguifer, Latin.] Conveying blood.

The fifth conjunctum of the nerves is branched to the muscles of the face, particularly the cheeks, whose sanguiferous vessels it winds about. Derham.

SANGUIFICATION. n. f. [sanguification,
Fr. sanguis and facio, Latin.] The production of blood; the conversion of the chyle into blood.

Since the lungs are the chief instrument of sanguification, the animal that has that organ faulty can never have the vital juices derived from the blood, in a good state. Arbuthnot.

Athematic persons have voracious appetites, and consequently, for want of a right sanguification, are leucophlegmatick. Arbuthnot.

SANGUIFER. n. f. [sanguis and facio,
 Latin.] Producer of blood.

Bitters, like cholera, are the best sanguifers, and also the best febrifuges. Poyet.

SANGUIFY. v. n. [sanguis and facio,
 Latin.] To produce blood.

SANGUINENESS. n. f. [from sanguine.] SANGUINITY. } Ardour; heat of expectation; confidence. Sanguinity is perhaps only used by Swift.

Rage, or phrenzy it may be, in some perhaps natural courage, or sanguineness of temper in others;
 but true valour it is not, if it knows not as well to suffer as to do. That mind is truly great, and only that, which stands above the power of all extrinsec violence; which keeps itself a distinct principality, independent upon the outward man. Decay of Piety.

I very much distrust your sanguinity. Swift.

SANGUINEOUS. adj. [sanguineus, Latin;
sanguis, French.]

1. Constituting blood.

This animal of Plato containeth not only *sanguthin ferous matter, not a well-digested pus.

Observing the ulcer sanious, I proposed digestion
 as the only way to remove the pain. Wiseman.

SANITY. n. f. [santas, Latin.] Soundness of mind.

How pregnant, sometimes, his replies are!
 A happiness that often madness hits on,
 Which sanity and reason could not be
 So properly delivered of. Shakspeare.

SANK. v. The preterit of sink.

As if the opening of her mouth to Zelmene had opened some great floodgate of sorrow, whereof her heart could not abide the violent issue, she sunk to the ground. Sidney.

Our men followed them close, took two ships, and gave divers others of their ships their death's wounds, whereof soon after they sank and perished. Bacon.

SANS. prep. [French.] Without. Out of use.

Last scene of all,
 That ends this strange eventful history,
 Is second childishness and mere oblivion,
 Sane teet, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing. Shakspeare.

For nature so preposterously to err,
 Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
 Sans witchcraft could not. Shakspeare.

SAP. n. f. [sæpe, Saxon; sap, Dutch.]

The vital juice of plants; the juice that circulates in trees and herbs.

Now sucking of the sap of herbs most sweet,
 Or of the dew, which yet on them does lie,
 Now in the same bathing his tender feet. Spenser.

Though now this grained face of mine be hid
 In sap consuming winter's drizzled snow,
 And all the conduits of my blood freeze up,
 Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shakspeare.

Wound the bark of our fruit trees,
 I felt, being over-proud with sap and blood,
 With too much riches it confound itself. Shakspeare.

His presence had infused
 Into the plant scintillant saps. Milton.

The sap which at the root is bred
 In trees, through all the boughs is spread. Water.

Vegetables consist of the same parts with animal substances, spirit, water, salt, oil, earth; all which are contained in the sap they derive from the earth. Arbuthnot.

To SAP. v. a. [sapper, Fr. sappare, Ital.] To undermine; to subvert by digging to mine.

Their dwellings were sapp'd by floods,
 Their houses fell upon their household gods. Dry.

In enroll'd tufts, flow'rs purified, blue and white Lake saphire pearl, in rich embroidery. Shakspeare.

He tinctures rubies with their rosy hue,
 And on the saphire spreads a heavenly blue. Blackmore.

That the saphire should grow foul, and lose a beauty, when worn by one that is so heroic, as many other fabulous stories of gems, are great arguments that their virtue is equivalent to the value. Derham.

SAPPHIRINE. adj. [sapphirinus, Latin.]
 Made of sapphire; resembling sapphire.

She was too saphirine and clear for thee;
 Clay, flint, and jet now thy fit dwellings be. Denon.

A few grains of shell silver, with a convenient proportion of powdered crystal glass, having be-kept three hours in fusion, I found the coluquate mass, upon breaking the crucible, of a level saphirine blue. Berthollet.

SAPID. adj. [sapidus, Latin.] Tasseful palatable; making a powerful stimulation upon the palate.

Thus camels, to make the water sapid, do rub
 the mud with their feet.

The most oily parts are not separated by a slight decoction, till they are disentangled from the salts; for if what remains of the subject, after the infusion and decoction be continued to be boiled down with the addition of fresh water, a fat, saps odorous, viscous, inflammable, frothy water is constantly be found floating a-top of the boiling liquor. Arbuthnot.

SAPIDITY. n. f. [from sapid.] Taste of foodness; power of stimulating the palate.

As for their taste, if their nutriment be as neither can it be an instrument thereof; for the body of that element is ingustible, and void of a *sapid*ity. Brown.

If sapidness belong not to the mercurial principle of vegetables and animals, it will scarce be distinguished from their phlegm. Boerhaave.

SAPIENCE. n. f. [sapiencia, Fr. sapientia,
 Lat.] Wisdom; sageness; knowledge.

By sapience, I mean what the ancients did by philosophy; the habit or disposition of mind which supporteth the love of wisdom. Grotius.

Not only they that dwell in lowly dust,
 The sons of darkness and of ignorance;
 But they whom thou, great Jove, by doom ordain'd
 Didst to the top of honour erst advance:

They now, put up with a delightful indulgence.
Despite the brood of blessed sapience. Spenser.
King James, of immortal memory, among all the lovers and admirers of divine and human sapience, accomplished at Theobalds his own days on earth.
Because enterprises guided by ill counsels have equal success to those by the best judgment conducted, therefore had violence the same external figure with sapience. Raleigh.

Sapience and love
Immeasurably, and all his father in him shone. Milton.

O sovereign, virtuous, precious of all trees
In paradise! of operation blest
To sapience. Milton.

Many a wretch in Bedlam,
Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about,
Still has gratitude and sapience,
To spare the folks that give him hap-pence. Swift.

SAPIENT. adj. [sapiens, Lat.] Wise;
sage.

There the sapient king held dalliance. Milton.

SAPLESS. adj. [saploos, Dutch.]

1. Wanting sap; wanting vital juice.
Phebe's arms, like to a wither'd vine,
That droops his sapless branches to the ground. Shakespeare.

The tree of knowledge, blasted by disputes,
Produces sapless leaves instead of fruits. Denham.
This single stick was full of sap; but now in vain does art tie that withered bundle of twigs to its sapless trunk. Swift.

sarabande, Fr.] A Spanish dance.

The several modifications of this tune-playing quality in a fiddle, to play preludes, sarabands, jigs, and gavots, are as much real qualities in the instrument as the thought is in the mind of the composer. Arbutnot and Pope.

SARCASM. n. f. [sarcasme, Fr. sarcas- mus, Lat.] A keen reproach; a taunt;
a gibe.

Sarcasms of wit are transmitted in story.
Government of the Tongue.

Rejoice, O young man, says Solomon, in a severe sarcasm, in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart; but know that for these things
God will bring thee into judgment. Rogers.

When an angry matter says to his servant, It is bravely done, it is one way of giving a severe reproach; for the words are spoken by way of sar- casm, or irony. Watts.

SARCASTICAL. } adj. [from sarcas-
SARCASTIC. } Keen; taunting;

And blushing morning face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school.
Schoolboy's leg with fatchels in their hands.

To SATIATE. v. a. [satio, Lat.] To satiate; to glut; to pall; to feed beyond natural desires.

Dated at length, ere long I might perceive Strange alteration in me.

How well their bodies creep
Enrich the victors, while the vulture fate
Their maws with full repast.

Thy sieles fire with, mistaken king, employ,
So with rage, and not with joy.

SAT'ELITE. n. f. [satelles, Lat. satellite,
Fr.] This word is commonly pronounced in prose with the e mute in the plural, as in the singular, and is therefore only of three syllables, but Pope has in the plural continued the Latin form, and assigned it four; I think, improperly.] A small planet revolving round a larger.

Four moons move about Jupiter, and five about Saturn, called their satellites.

The smallest planets are situated nearest the sun and Venus; whereas Jupiter and Saturn, that are vastly greater, and have many satellites about them, are widely removed to the extreme regions of the system.

Ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove?

SAT'ELITIOUS. adj. [from satelles, Lat.]
Committing of satellites.

Their solidity and openness, and their satellitic attendance, their revolutions about the sun, and their relations about their axis, are exactly the same.

To SATIATE. v. a. [satio, Lat.]
1. To satisfy; to fill.

Those insects are the most grateful where the degree of heat is small, or the strength of the smell allayed; for their rather cool the tempe than satiate it.

Buying of land is the result of a full and satiated gain; and men in trade seldom think of laying out their money upon land, till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ.

The loosen'd winds
Hurl'd high above the clouds; till all their force
Consum'd, her rav'nous jaws the earth satiates close'd.

2. To glut; to pall; to fill beyond natural desire.

Whatever novelty presents, children are presently eager to have a taste, and are as soon sati-ated with it.

He may be satiated, but not satisfy'd.

3. To gratify desire.

I may yet survive the malice of my enemies,
Although they should be satiated with my blood.

4. To saturate; to impregnate with as much as can be contained or imbibed.

Why does not salt of tartar draw more water out of the air, than in a certain proportion to its quantity, but for want of an attractive force after it is satiated with water?

SAT'iate. adj. [from the verb.] Glutted; full to satiety. When it has with, it seems a participle; when of, an adjective.

Our generals retir'd to their estates,
In life's cool evening, satiated of applause,
Nor think of bleeding ev'n in Brunswick's cause.

Now may'st and slaves all hush'd and satiated lay.

Yet, in dreams, the coward of the day.

SAT'iate. n. f. [satietas, Lat. satieté, Fr.]
Fulness beyond desire or pleasure; more than enough; wearisomeness of plenty;
state of being pallied or glutted.

He leaves a shallow glass to plunge him in the deep.

And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst.

Nothing more jealous than a favourite, especially towards the winning-time and suspect of satiety.

In all pleasures there is satiety; and after they be used, their verdure departeth.

They satiate and soon fill,
Though pleasant; but thy words, with grace divine
Imbu'd, bring to their sweetness no satiety.

No action, the usefulness of which has made it the matter of duty, but a man may bear the continual pursuit of, without loathing or satiety.

The joy unequal'd, it ends its gain,
With not satiety, though e'er to bleed,
And but more relish'd as the more distress'd.

SAT'IRY. n. f. [satira, Fr. drapo di satira, Italian; satire, Dutch.] A poetical and shining filk.

Upon her body she wore a doublet of sky-colour satira, covered with plates of gold, and as it were nailed with precious stones, that in it she might seem armed.

The ladies dress'd in rich fymars were seen,
Of Florence satira, flower'd with white and green,
And for shade beneath the bloomy guile.

Her petticoat, transform'd apace,
Became black satira flower'd with lace.

Lay the child carefully in a case, covered with a mantle of blue satira.

SAT'IRE. n. f. [satira, anciently satira,
Lat. not from satyrus, a satyr; satire, Fr.] A poem in which wickedness or folly is censured. Proper satire is distinguished, by the generality of the reflections, from a lampoon which is aimed against a particular person; but they are too frequently confounded: it has on before the subject.

He dares to sing thy praises in a climate
Where vice triumphs, and virtue is a crime;
Where ev'n to draw the picture of thy mind,
Is satyr on the most of human kind.

My verse is satire, Dorset lend your ear,
And patronise a muse you cannot fear.

SAT'IRICAL. adj. [satiricus, Lat. satirical, Fr. from satire.]

1. Belonging to satire; employed in writing of invective.

You must not think, that a satyrical style
Allows of scandalous and brutal words.

What human kind desires, and what they shun,
Rage, passions, pleasures, impotence of will,
Shall this satirical collection fill.

2. Cenforious; severe in language.

Slanders, sir; for the satirical slave says here, that old men have grey beards; that their fages are wrinkled.

He that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need be afraid of others memory.

On me when dunces are satirical,
I take it for a panegyrick.

SAT'IRICALLY. adv. [from satirical.] With invective; with intention to censure or vilify.

He applies them satirically to some customs, and kinds of philosophy, which he arraigns.

SAT'IRIST. n. f. [from satire.] One who writes satires.

I first adventure, follow me who list,
And he the second English satirist.

Wycherly, in his writings, is the sharpest satirist of his time; but, in his nature, he has all the softness of the tenderest dispositions: in his writings he is severe, bold, undertaking; in his nature gentle, modest, offensive.

All vain pretenders have been constantly the topics of the most candid satirists, from the Codrus of Juvenal to the Damon of Boileau.

Yet left his nature, though severe his lay,
His anger moral, and his wisdom gay:

Wish satirist who touch'd the mean to true,
As show'd vice had his hate and pity too.

To SAT'IRIZE. v. a. [satirizer, Fr. from satire.] To censure as in a satire.

Cunctation is described as a veil cast over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness.

Should a writer single out and point his railing at particular persons, or satirize the miserable, he might be sure of pleasing a great part of his readers, but must be a very ill man if he could please himself.

I insist that my lion's mouth be not delect with fear'd it, for I would not make use of him to rend
the human species, and satirize his better.

It is as hard to satirize well a man of distinguished virtues, as to praise well a man of distinguished vices.

SATISFACTION. n. f. [satisfactio, Latin satisfactio, Fr.]

1. The act of pleading to the full, or state being pleaded.

Run over the circle of earthly pleasure, and had not God secured a man a solid pleasure to his own actions, he would be forced to compile that pleasure was not satisfaction.

2. The act of pleading.

The mind, having a power to suspend the exection and satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to consider the objects of them.

3. The state of being pleaded.

This a wretched satisfaction, a revengeful man takes, even in losing his life, provided his enemy for company.

There are very few discourses so short, clear, and consistent, to which most men may not, with satisfaction enough to themselves, raise a doubt.

4. Release from suspense, uncertainty, or uneasiness; conviction.

Wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?

—What satisfaction can you have?

5. Gratification; that which pleases.

Of every nation each illustrious name,
Such toys as these have chanted into fame;
Exchanging solid quiet to obtain
The windy satisfaction of the brain.

6. Amends; atonement for a crime; or compense for an injury.

Die he or justice must; unless for him
Some other able, and as willing, pay
The rigid satisfaction, death for death.

SATISFACTIVE. adj. [satisfactus, Latin satisfactus, Fr.]

Giving satisfaction.

By a final and satisfactive discernment of fact we lay the last effects upon the first cause of things.

SATISFACTORILY. adv. [from satisfactory.] So as to content.

Belonius hath been more satisfactorily expemental, not only as to the chances of experiments, but upon execution he found their success in their bellies.

They strain their memory to answer him satisfactorily unto all his demands.

SATISFACTORINESS. n. f. [from satisfactory.] Power of satisfying; power of giving content.

The incompleteness of the seraphic lover's happiness in his frictions, proceeds not from their of satisfactoriness, but his want of an entire possession of them.

SATISFACTORV. adj. [satisfactorv, Fr.
satisfactus, Lat.]

1. Giving satisfaction; giving content.

An intelligent American would scarce take a satisfactory account, it, desiring to learn of architecture, he should be told that a pillar was thing supported by a basis.

2. Atoning; making amends.

A most wise and sufficient means of redemption and salvation, by the satisfaction and mortification death and obedience of the incarnate Son of God, Jesus Christ. Swinfen.

To SATISFY. v. a. [satisfaire, Fr. satis-facio, Latin.]

1. To content; to please to such a degree as that nothing more is desired.

A good man shall be satisfied from himself. Proverbs.

I'm satisfy'd. My boy has done his duty. Addison.

2. To feed to the fill.

Who hath caused it to rain on the earth, to satisfy the desolate and waste ground, and to cause the bud of the tender tree to spring forth? Job.

I will pursue and divide the spoil; my lust shall be satisfied upon them. Ezra.

The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul. Proverbs.

3. To recompense; to pay to content.

He is well paid that is well satisfied; And I, delivering you, am satisfied, And therein do account myself well paid. Shaksp.

4. To appease by punishment.

Will he draw out, For anger's sake, finite to infinite In punishment, to satisfy his rigour, Justice'd never? That were to extend His sentence beyond dust and Nature's law. Milton.

5. To free from doubt, perplexity, or suspense.

Of many things useful and curious you may satisfy yourselves in Leonardi de Vinci. Dryden.

This I would willingly be satisfied in, whether the least, when it thinks thus, separate from the body, acts less rationally than when conjointly with it? Locke.

6. To convince.

He declares himself satisfied to the contrary, in which he has given up the cause. Dryden.

When come to the utmost extremity of body, it can there put a stop and satisfy the mind that is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that only itself can move into it! Locke.

The final evidences of the truth of the Gospel are in the affections most firm, solid, and satisfactory. Atterbury.

o SATISFY. v. a.

To give content.

To feed to the full.

To make payment.

By the quantity of silver they give or take, they estimate the value of other things, and satisfy for how thus silver becomes the measure of commerce. Locke.

SATURABLE. adj. [from saturate.] Impregnable with any thing till it will receive no more.

Be the figures of the fates never so various, yet if the atoms of water were fluid, they would always conform to those figures as to fill up all vacancies, and consequently the water would be saturable with the same quantity of any salt, which it would not. Crow.

SATURANT. adj. [from saturans, Latin.]

Impregnating to the fill.

To SATURATE. v. a. [satur, Latin.]

To impregnate till no more can be received or imbibed.

Rain-water is plentifully saturated with terrestrial matter, and more or less stored with it. Woodward.

His body has been fully saturated with the fluid of light, to be able to last so many years without any sensible diminution, though there are constant emanations thereof. Cheyne.

Still night succeeds

A storm'd shade, and saturated earth

Awaits the morning beams. Thomson.

SATURDAY. n. s. [saterneburg, or saterneburg, Sax. according to Ver- legen, from sater, a Saxon idol; more probably from Satur, dis Saturni.]

SCIENTIFIC. } adj. [Scientifique, Fr.
ENTRICK. } scientia and facio, Latin.] Producing demonstrative know-edge; producing certainty.

Natural philosophy proceeding from settled principles, therein is expected a satisfaction from certain progressions, and such as beget a sure notion: I object.

Nowhere are there more quick, inventive, and acutest capacities, fraught with all kind of edginess of knowledge.

No man, who first trafficks into a foreign country, has any scientific evidence that there is such a country, but by report, which can produce no more than a moral certainty; that is, a very high probability, and such as there can be no reason to doubt against.

The systems of natural philosophy that have obtained, are to be read more to know the hypotheses, and with hopes to gain there a comprehensive, agreeable, and satisfactory knowledge of the works of nature.

SCIENTIFICALLY. adv. [from scientific,
Latin.] In such a manner as to produce knowledge.

Sometimes it rests upon testimony, because it is difficult to believe than to be scientifically instructed.

SCIMITAR. n. f. [See Cimeter.] A short sword with a convex edge.

I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night,
such with my scimitar: I'll cool to-morrow.

SK. n. f. A cast calf. Ainsworth. In Scotland and in London they call it skink.

SCINTILLATE. v. n. [scintillo,
Latin.] To sparkle; to emit sparks.

SCINTILLATION. n. f. [scintillatio, Latin,
from scintilla.] The act of sparkling;
sparks emitted.

These scintillations are not the accession of the vapour the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflammable effluences discharged from the solid bodies.

He hath the planets scintillation is not seen, because of their proximity.

SCISSOR. n. f. [scissor, Latin.] One who knows many things superficially.

Thus this vanishing of authors which gave birth to that vanity of impertinent citations; their ridiculous foibles signify nothing to the wise and discerners, but the pedantry of the affected scissors.

Their passages were enough to humble the presumption of our modern scissors, if their pride were not as great as their ignorance.

SCISSOROUS. adj. [scissorius, Latin.] Superficially or imperfectly knowing. Not used.

I could with these scissorous zelotists had more content joined with their zeal.

SCISSURE. n. f. [scissura, French;
from scindere.] Battle with a shadow.
This should be written scissure.

To avoid this scissure, or imaginary combat of words, let us know, first, what you mean by the word of yourself.

SCISSURE. n. f. [scissure, Fr.] A small twig taken from one tree to be ingrafted into another.

Sweet sound, we marry
A gentle scissure to the wild it flock;
And make concave a bark of brier kind
And a nother race.

Merlin, drawn, in his left hand blossoms, and upon his arm.

The scissure is left of an old tree.

SCISSURE. n. f. [Latin.] A writ judicial, in law, most commonly to call a man to shew cause unto the court whence

it is sent, why execution of a judgment passed should not be made. This writ is not granted before a year and a day is passed after the judgment given.

SCISSURE. n. f. [from scissure.] An induration of the glands.

The difficulty of breathing, occasioned by scissure of the glands, is not to be cured.

SCISSURE. adj. [from scissure.] Having a gland indurated; consisting of a gland indurated.

How they are to be treated when they are firm-ous, scissure, or cancerous, you may see.

SCISSURE. n. f. [scissure, French. This should be written scissure, not scissure, because it comes from scissure, but because c in English has before e and i the sound of s. See SKEPTICK.] An indur-ated gland.

Any of these three may degenerate into a scissure,
and that scissure into a cancer.

SCISSURE. adj. [from scissure, Latin.] Capable of being divided smoothly by a sharp edge.

The differences of impenetrable and not impenetrable, scissure and not scissure, and many other passions of matter, are piebegan notions.

SCISSURE. adj. [scissure, Fr. scissure, Latin.] Capable of being cut or divided smoothly by a sharp edge.

Animal fat is a sort of amphibious substance,
scissure like a solid, and resolvable by heat.

SCISSURE. n. f. [scissure, Fr. scissure, Latin.]
The act of cutting.

Nerves may be wounded by scissure or puncture:
the former way they are usually cut through, and wholly cease from action.

SCISSURE. n. f. [This word is variously written, as it is supposed to be derived by different writers; of whom some write scissure, from scindere, or scindere; others scissure, from scindere; and some scissure, scissure, or scissure, from scissure, French.]
A small pair of sheers, or blades moveable on a pivot, and intercepting the thing to be cut.

He heard they have sing'd off with brands of fire;
And ever, as it blaz'd, they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair.

My master preaches patience to him, and the while
His man with scissure nicks him for a fool.

Wanting the scissure, with these hands I'll tear.
If that obstruct my sight, this load of hair.

When the lawyers and tradesmen brought extravagant bills, Sir Roger wore a pair of scissure in his pocket, with which he would nip a quarter of a yard off nicely.

SCISSURE. n. f. [scissure, Latin.] A crack;
a rent; a fissure.

The breach seems like the scissure and ruptures of an earthquake, and thus opens to swallow all that attempt to close it, and reserves its cure only for omnipotence.

SCISSURE. adj. [scissure, French; from scissure.] Hard: an epithet of one of the coats of the eye.

The ligaments observed in the inside of the scissure muscles of the eye, serve instead of a muscle, by their contraction, to alter the figure of the eye.

To SCOTCH. } putting a stone or piece of wood under it before.

TO SCOFF. v. n. [scoppen, Dutch.] To treat with insolent ridicule: to treat with contumelious language: with at.

Of two noblemen of the west of England, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would alk of those that had been at his table. Tell truly, was there never a stout or dry blow given?

There is no greater argument of a light and inconsiderate person, than prophane to scoff at religion.

Such is love,
And such the laws of his fantastick empire,
The wanton boy delights to bend the mighty,
And scoffs at the vain wisdom of the wife.

SCOFF. n. f. [from the verb.] Contemptuous ridicule; expression of scorn; contumelious language.

Our answer therefore to their reasons is, no; to their scoff, nothing.

With scoffs and jeers, and contumelious taunts,
In open market-place produced they nor Shaksp.
How could men surrender up their reason to flattery, more abusive and impudent than the rudest scoff and the most insolent scoff?

Some little folks, that have got a smattering of astronomy or chemistry, for want of a due acquaintance with other sciences, make a scoff at them all in comparison of their favourite science.

SCOFFER. n. f. [from scoff.] Insolent ridiculer; saucy scorner; contumelious reproacher.

Sell when you can; you are not for all markets:
Cry the man mercy, love him, take his offer;
Foul is the most foul, being found to be a scoffer.

Divers have herded themselves amongst these profane scoffers, not that they are convinced by their reasons, but terrified by their contumacious conduct.

Consider what the apostle tells these scoffers they were ignorant of; not that there was a deluge, but he tells them that they were ignorant that the heavens and the earth of old were to and to be constituted.

SCOFFINGLY. adv. [from scoffing.] In contempt; in ridicule.

Antioch applied this hermitick scoffing to the scorpions at Athens.

TO SCOLD. v. n. [scholden, Dutch.] To quarrel clamorously and rudely.

I order me, 'tis the full time that ever
I'm forc'd to scold.

The one is famous for a scolding tongue,
And the other is for beauteous modesty.

They attacked me, some with pious mouns, others grinning and only showing their teeth, others laughing, and others scolding and reviling.

For gods, we are, as Homer told,
Can in celestial language scold.

Scolding and cursing are but common conversation.

SCOLD. n. f. [from the verb.] A clamorous, rude, mean, low, foul-mouthed woman.

A throw in domestic life is now become a scold
in point of.

Now singing shrill, and a broken, old between;
Nod's answer loud now scold.

The scollers, or balloons, of quality are woful
in conversation.

SCOLLO. n. f. [schol, German.]

1. A fort; a bulwark.

Each fellows are perfect in the great commanders names, and they will learn you by rote where terraces were done; at such and such a scoll, at such a breach.

2. The head: perhaps as being the acro- polis, or citadel, of the body. A low word.

Why does he suffer this rude knave now to know him about the sconce with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery? Shakespeare.

3. A pensile candlestick, generally with a looking-glass to reflect the light.

Golden sconces hang upon the walls,
To light the costly tapers and the halls. Dryden.
Triumphant Umbriel, on a sconce's height,
Clapp'd his glad wings, and lat to view the fight. Pope.

Put candles into sconces.

4. A mulct, or fine.

To SCONCE, v. a. [A word used in the universities, and derived plausibly by Skinner, whose etymologies are generally rational, from sconce, as it signifies the head; to sconce being to fix a fine on any one's head.] To mulct; to fine. A low word, which ought not to be retained.

Scoop, n. f. [Schorpe, Dutch.]

O hell life!

What, all my pretty chickens and their dam
At one fell swoop? Shakespeare.

To SCOOP, v. a. [schoopen, Dutch.]

1. To lade out.

As by the brook he flood,
He scoop'd the water from the crystal flood. Dryden.

2. This word seems to have not been understood by Theophrastus.

Melt'd Alpine snows

The mountain edifices fill, those ample stores
Of water scoop'd among the hollow rocks. Thomson.

3. To empty by lading.

It some penurious source by chance appear'd
Scanty of waters, when you scoop'd it dry,
And offer'd the tall helmet up to Cato,
Did he not dash the untasted moisture from him? Addison.

4. To carry off, so as to leave the place hollow.

A spectator would think this circular mount had been actually scoop'd out of that hollow space. Spectator.

much earth at a time. Addison.

To his little eye, that in his forehead glid'd
Take a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
A tork that we dexterously applied.

Whi b, in the spacious socket turning round,
Scoop out the big round jelly from its orb. Addison.

5. To cut into hollownels or depth.

Whate'er part of the arbon they scoop in, has an influence on all the rest, for the sea immediately works the whole bottom to a level. Addison.

Those carabuncles the Indians will scoop, for us to hold above a punt. Arbutnot.

It much conduces how to flare
The little race of birds, that hop
From spray to spray, scooping the coldest fruit.

Infatuates undisturb'd. Philips.

The grains of the place
Or helps th' ambitions bill the heav'n to scale,
Or scoops in encircling the vales. Pope.

SCOOPER, n. f. [from scoop.] One who scoops.

SCOPE, n. f. [scopus, Latin.]

1. A mark; intention; drift.

Your scope is as mine own.

So to enforce or quicken the laws,
As to your bad seems good. Shakespeare.

His coming hither hath no farther scope
Than for his funeral royalties, and to beg Intelligence immediate on his knees. Shakespeare.

Had the whole scope of the author been a slave, able to his title, he would have only undertaken to prove what every man is convinced of; but the drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compulsion towards the rebels. Addison.

2. Thing aimed at; mark; final end.

The scope of all their pleading against man's authority is to overthrow such laws and constitutions in the church, as, depending thereupon, if they should therefore be taken away, would leave neither face nor memory of church to continue long in the world. Hooker.

Now was time

To aim their counsels to the fairest scope. Hub. Ta.
We should impute the war to the scope at which it smeth. Raleigh.

He, in what he counsels, and in what excels,
Misfratit, grounds his courage on despair
And utter dissolution, as the scope

Of all his aim. Milton.

3. Room; space; amplitude of intellectual view.

An herack poet is not tied to a bare representation of what is true, but that he might let himself look to visionary objects, which may give him a free scope for imagination. Dryden.

These theories being admitted into optics,
there would be scope enough of handling that terminology voluminously, after a new manner, not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refraction. Newton.

4. Liberty; freedom from restraint.

It this constrain them to grant that their axiom is not to take any place, even in those things only where the church hath larger scope, it resteth that they search out some stronger reason. Hooker.

Al, cut my face rounder,
That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,
On che' I swoon with this dead killing news. Shakespeare.

5. Liberty beyond just limits; licence.

Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope
'I would be my tyranny to strike and gall them
For what I bid them do. Shakespeare.

Being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working. Shakespeare.

6. Act of riot; folly.

As farlet is the father of much fist,
So every scope, by the immoderate use,
Turns to riotous. Shakespeare.

2. To burn.

Power was given to scorch men with fire.

The same that left thee by the cooling fire,
Sate from sun's heat, but scorched with beauty's beam. Keats.

You look with such contempt on pain,
That languishing you conquer more;

So lightning which in storms appear Scorch more than when the skies are clear. Keats.

The same beams that shine, scorched to
I rave,
And, like a giddy bird in dead of night,
Fly round the fire that scorches me to death. Dryden.

He, from whom the nations should receive Justice and freedom, lives himself a slave;
Tortur'd by cruel change of wild desires,
Lash'd by mad rage, and scorched by brutal fire. Pope.

Not half the number in their seats are found,
But men and steeds lie growling on the ground;
The points of spears are stuck within the shield,
The steeds without their riders scour the field,
The knights unhors'd.
Dryden.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,
The line too labours, and the words move slow:
Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main.
Pope.

To SCOUR. v. n.

1. To perform the office of cleaning domestic utensils.

I keep his house, and wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds. Shakespeare.

2. To clean.

Warm water is softer than cold; for it scoureth better.
Bacon.

3. To be purged or lax; to be diseased with looseness.

Some apothecaries, upon stamping colicquintida, have been put into a great scouring by the vapour only.
Bacon.

Convulsion and scouring, they say, do often come one another.

If you turn sheep into wheat or rye to feed, let it not be too rank, lest it make them scou. Mortimer.

4. To rove; to range.

Barbarossa, scouring along the coast of Italy, struck an exceeding terror into the minds of the citizens of Rome.
Knotes.

5. To run here and there.

The enemy's drum is heard, and fearful scouring doth choke the air with dull.
Shakespeare.

6. To run with great eagerness and swift-ness; to scamper.

She from him fled with all her pow'r,
Who after her as hastily 'gan to scour. Fair Queen.

I saw men scour to on their way: I eyed them even to their ships.
Shakespeare.

Word was brought him, in the middle of his schemes, that his house was robbed; and so away he scours to learn the truth.
L'Estrange.

If they be men of fraud, they'll scour off themselves, and leave those that trust them to pay the reckoning.
L'Estrange.

So four fierce couriers, starting to the race,
Scour through the plain, and lengthen ev'ry pace;
Nor reins, nor curbs, nor threat'ning cries they fear,
But force along the trembling charioteer. Dryden.

As soon as any foreign object presses upon the sense, those spirits, which are posted upon the out-wards, immediately take the alarm, and scour off to the brain, which is the head quarters.
Collier.

Swift at her call her husband scoured away
To wreak his hunger on the desin'd prey. Pope.

What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence?
Shakespeare.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heav'n finds means to kill your joys with love.
Shakespeare.

Famine and plague are sent as scourges for amendment.
2 Efdras.

3. One that afflicts, harasses, or destroys.

Thus Attila was called flagellum Dei.
Is this the scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot so much fear'd abroad,
That with his name the mothers still their babes?
Shakespeare.

Such conquerors are not the favourites but scourges of God, the instruments of that vengeance.

In all these trials I have borne a part;
I was myself the scourge that caus'd the smart.
Pope.

Immortal Jove!
I let kings no more with gentle mercy sway,
Or blest a people willing to obey;
But crush the nations with an iron rod,
And every monarch be the scourge of God. Pope.

4. A whip for a top.

If they had a top, the scourge sick and leather strap should be left to their own making. Locke.

To SCOURGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

SCOUT. n. f. [escout, Fr. from escouter; auscultare, Lat. to listen; scotta, Italian.]

One who is sent privily to observe the motions of the enemy.

Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,
That dogg'd the mighty army of the dauphin?
Shakespeare.

As when a scout,
Through dark and desert ways with peril gone
All night, at last, by break of cheerful dawn,
Obtains the brow of some high-climbing hill.
Milton.

This great vessel may have lesser cabins, wherein scouts may be lodged for the taking of observations.

The scouts to sev'ral parts divide their way,
To learn the natives manners, their towns, explore the coasts.
Dryden.

To SCOUT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To go out, in order to observe the motions of an enemy privately.

Off on the bordering deep Encamp their legions; or with obscure wing
Scout far and wide into the realm of night, Scorning surprise. Milton.

As a hunted panther casts about Her glaring eyes, and pricks her listening ears to
So she, to thorn his toils, her scout employ'd.
Dryden.

Command a party out,
With a strict charge not to engage, but scout.

2. To ridicule; to sneer. This is a scout unauthorized, and vulgar.

With bent lowering brows, as she would threaten,
She scowl'd and frown'd with froward countenance. Fairy Queen.

Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes
Did scowl on Richard. Shakespeare.

Not a courtier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad at the thing they scowl at. Shakespeare.

The dusky clouds o'ercrept
Heav'n's cheerful face; the low'ring element
Scowls o'er the darken'd landscape snow or flow.
Milton.

Fly, fly, profane fogs! far hence fly away
With your dull influence; it is for you
To sit and scowl upon night's heavy brow. Crahan.

In rueful gaze
The cattle stand, and on the scowling heav'n's Cast a deploring eye. Thompe.

SCOWL. n. f. [from the verb.] Look fullenness or discontent; gloom.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new-born day
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if he scorn'd to think of night;
When a ruddy storm, whose scowl
Made heav'n's radiant face look foul,
Call'd for an untimely night.
Crahan.

To blot the newly-blossom'd light.
SCOWLINGLY. adv. [from scowl.] With frowning and fullen look.

Grate on their scrambled pipes of wretched straw.
Milton.

SCRAP. n. f. [from scrape, a thing scraped or rubbed off.]

1. A small particle; a little piece; a fragment.

It is an unaccountable vanity to spend all our time taking into the scrap and imperfect remains of former ages, and neglecting the clearer notices of our own. Granville.

Trencher equires spend their time in hopping from one great man's table to another's, only to pick up scraps and intelligence. L'Estrange.

Language are to be learned only by reading and talking, and not by scraps of authors got by heart. Locke.

No rag, no scrap, of all the beau, or wit,
That once so flatter'd, and that once so writ. Pope.

I can never have too many of your letters. I am angry at every scrap of paper lost. Pope.

2. Crumb; small particles of meat left at the table.

The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
One bred of ulnas, and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps of th' court, is no contract. Shakspere.

The attendants puffa court up beyond her bounds,
for th' own scraps and advantage. Bacon.

On bones, on scraps of dogs let me be fed,
My limbs uncover'd, and expos'd my head
To bleak & cold. Granville.

What has he else to bait his traps,
Or bring his vermin in, but scraps?
The offals of a church distress,
A hungry vicarage at best. Swift.

3. A small piece of paper. This is properly scrip.

Programs with thousand bits the scrip unseen,
And silent tells a king, or buys a queen. Pope.

TO SCRAPE. v. a. [scrapen, Saxon; scraper, Dutch; jafrcepiug, Erse.]

entry, and the scraper will last the longer. Swift.

2. A miser; a man intent on getting money; a scrape-penny.

Be thrifty, but not covetous; therefore give Thy need, thine honour, and thy friend his due:
Never was scraper brave man. Get to live;
Then live, and use it; else it is not true
That thou hast gotten; surely, use alone
Makes money not a contemptible stone. Ilthert.

3. A vile siddler.

Out! ye sempiternal scrappers. Colden.

Have wild boars or dolphins the least emotion at the most elaborate strains of your modern scrappers, all which have been tamed and humanized by ancient musicians? Arbuthnot.

Scratch'd with a rake a furrow for his grain,
And cover'd with his hand the shallow seed again.
Dryden.

A fort of small sand-coloured stones, so hard as to scratch glass. Grew.

2. To tear with the nails.

How can I tell but that his talons may Yet scratch my son, or rend his tender hand?
Fairy Queen.

I should have scratch'd out your unfencing eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee. Shaksp.

I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.

—Keep your ladyship still in that mind; so some gentleman or other shall scrape a predestinate scratch face.

—Scratching could not make as worse, as 'twere such a face as yours were. Shakspere.

Scots are like witches, scratch what scratch, Scratch till the blood scrap, they'll not hurt you then. Shakspere.

To wish that there were nothing but such dull tame things in the world, that will neither bite nor scratch, is as childish as to wish there were no sea in nature. Morr.

Unhand me, or I'll scratch your face;
Let go, for shame. Dryden.

3. To wound slightly.

4. To hurt slightly with any thing pointed or keen.

Daphne, roaming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds.
Shakspere.

5. To rub with the nails.

If any of their labourers can scratch out a pamphlet, they desire no wit, style, or argument. Swift.

SCRATCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An incision ragged and shallow.

The coarse file cuts deep, and makes deep scratches in the work; and before you can take out those deep scratches with your finer cut file, those places where the ridings were when your work was forged, may become dents to your hammer dents. Mason.

The smaller the particles of those substances are,
the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished, but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by bringing its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible. Newton.

2. Laceration with the nails.

Their nails with scratches shall deform my breast,
I let by my look or colour be express'd
The mark of aught high-born, or ever better dress'd.
Prior.

3. A slight wound.

The valiant bent turning on her with open jaws, she gave him such a thrust through his breast, that all the lion could do was with his open paw to tear off the mantle and sleeve of Zellman, with a little scratch rather than a wound. Sidney.

Heav'n forbid a shallow scratch should drive
The prince of Wales from such a field as this.
Shakspere.

SCRATCHER. n. f. [from scratch.] He that scratches.

SCRATCHES. n. f. Cracked ulcers or cutting scraps, which is laying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches. Swift.

TO SCRAWL. v. a. [I suppose to be corrupted from scrabble.] To draw or mark irregularly or clumsily.

Perute my leaves through ev'ry part,
And think thou dost as owner's heart, Scrawl'd o'er with trifles thus, and quite
As hard, as senseless, and as light. Swift.

TO SCRAWL. v. n.

1. To write unskilfully and inelegantly.

3 Y 2

Think not your verses scribbling,
 That with a golden pen you scrawl,
 And scribble in a Berlin. Swift.

2. [from crawl.] To creep like a reptile. Ainsw.

SCRAWL. n. f. [from the verb.] Unskillful and inelegant writing.
 The left hand will make such a scrawl, that it will not be legible. Arbutnot.

To SCREAM. v. n. [from shreman, Saxon.]

1. To cry out shrilly, as in terror or agony.
 Soon a whirlwind rose around,
 And from afar he heard a screaming sound
 As of a dame distress'd, who cried for aid,
 And all'd with loud laments the secret shade. Dryden.
 The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,
 Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;
 A jarring sound results, and mingles in the sky. Dryden.

If chance a mouse creeps in her sight,
 Can finely counterfeit a fright;
 So sweetly screams, if it comes near her,
 She ravishes all hearts to hear her. Swift.

2. To cry shrilly.
 I heard the owl scream, and the crickets cry. Shakespeare.

SCREAM. n. f. [from the verb.] A shrill, quick, loud cry of terror or pain.
 Our chimnies were blown down; and, as they fell, Lamentings heard i' the air, strange screams of death. Shakespeare.

Then flash'd the livid lightning from her eyes,
 And screams of horror rend'd the affrighted skies. Pope.

To SCREECH. v. n. [skriku, to cry, Icelandic.]

1. To cry out as in terror or anguish.
Screeching is an appetite of expelling that which suddenly strikes the spirits. Bacon.

2. To cry as a night owl: thence called a screechowl.

SCREECH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Cry of horror and anguish.

2. Harsh horrid cry.
 The birds obscene, that nightly flock'd to taste,
 With hollow screeches fled from the due report;
 And ravenous dogs, allur'd by scent'd blood,
 And barking wolves, ran howling to the wood. Pope.

SCREECHOWL. n. f. [screech and owl.]
 An owl that hoots in the night, and whose voice is supposed to betoken danger, misery, or death.
 Deep night,
 The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
 The time when screechows cry, and bawdies howl. Shakespeare.

Let him, that will a screechowl say be call'd,
 Go into Troy, and say there, Hector's dead. Shakespeare.

By the screechowl's dismal note,
 By the black night-raven's throat,
 I charge thee, Hob. Drayton.

Jupiter, though he had jogg'd the balance to weigh down Turnus, sent the screechowl to discourage him. Dryden.

Sooner shall screechows bark in sunny day,
 Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love. Gay.

SCREEN. n. f. [ecra, French.]

1. Any thing that affords shelter or concealment.
 Now near enough: your leavy screens throw down,
 And show like those you are. Shakespeare.
 Some ambitious men seem as screens to princes in matters of danger and envy. Bacon.
 Our people, who transport themselves, are settled in those interjacent tracts, as a screen against the insults of the savages. Swift.
 My juniors by a year,
 Who wisely thought my age a screen,
 When death approach'd, to stand between;
 The screen remov'd, their hearts are trembling. Swift.

2. Any thing used to exclude cold or light.
 When there is a screen between the candle and the eye, yet the light passeth to the paper whereon one writeth. Bacon.
 One speaks the glory of the British queen,
 And one describes a charming Indian screen. Pope.
 Ladies make their old clothes into patchwork for screens and stools. Swift.

3. A riddle to sift fang.

To SCREEN. v. a. [from the noun.]

 Back'd with a ridge of hills,
 That screen'd the fruits of th' earth, and seats of men,
 From cold septentrion blasts. Milton.
 A good magistrate's retinue of state screens him from the dangers which he is to incur for the sake of it. Asterbury.
 This gentle deed shall fairly be set foremost,
 To screen the wild escapades of lawless passion. Rowe.

2. [cerno, crevi, Lat.] To sift; to riddle.
 Let the cases be filled with natural earth, taken the first half spit, from just under the turf of the best pasture-ground, mixed with one part of very mellow soil screened. Evelyn.

SCREW. n. f. [scroevē, Dut. strou, Fr.] One of the mechanical powers, which is defined a right cylinder cut into a furrowed spiral: of this there are two kinds, the male and female; the former being cut convex, so that its threads rise outwards; but the latter channelled on its concave side, so as to receive the former. Quincy.
 The screw is a kind of wedge, that is multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a vertus at one end of it. Wilkins.
 After your apples are ground, commit them to the screw press, which is the best. Mortimer.

To SCREW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To turn or move by a screw.
 Some, when the press, by utmost vigour screw'd,
 Has drain'd the pulposus mass, regale their swine
 With the dry refuse. Philips.

2. To fasten with a screw.

 With centrick and eccentric, scribbled o'er Cycle and picycle, orb in orb. Milton.

2. To write without use or elegance; as he scribbled a pamphlet.

To SCRIBBLE. v. n. To write without care or beauty.
 If a man should affirm, that an ape, casual meeting with pen, ink, and paper, and talking scribble, did happen to write exactly the Leviathan of Hobbes, would anybody believe such a story? And yet he can easily scribble things as meretricious as that. Bentley.
 If Mævius scribble in Apollo's spite,
 There are who judge still worse than he can write. Pope.

Leave flattery to fulsome dedicators,
 Whom, when they praise, the world believes a more Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er. P. P.

SCRIBBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Worthless writing.
 By solemnly endeavouring to countenance conjectures, I might be thought dogmatical in hasty scribble. Pope.
 If it struck the present taste, it was soon transferred into the plays and current scribbles of the week, and became an addition to our language. Swift.

SCRIBBLER. n. f. [from scribble.] A petty author; a writer without worth.
 The most copious writers are the arrantest scribblers, and in so much talking the tongue runs before the wit. L'Estrange.
 The actors represent such things as they are capable, by which they and the scribbler may get their living. Druden.
 The scribbler, pinch'd with hunger, writes to die,
 And to your genius must conform his line. Grass.
 To affirm he had cause to apprehend the same treatment with his father, is an improbable scandal flung upon the nation by a few bigotted French scribbles. Swift.
 Nobody was concerned or surprised, if this is that scribbler was proved a dunce. Letter to Pope's Duacod.

SCRIBE. n. f. [scribe, Fr. scriba, Lat.]

1. Writing.
It is not only remembered in many scriptures,
but famous for the death and overthrow of Judas.
Raleigh.

2. Sacred writing; the Bible.
With us there is never any time bestowed in divine service, without the reading of a great part of the holy scripture, which we account a thing most necessary. Hooker.

The devil can cite scriptures for his purpose:
An evil soul producing holy witness
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek.
Shakespeare.
There is not any action which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the scripture will give him a clear precept, or prohibition, for it. South.
Forbear any discourse of other spirits, till his reading the scriptures history put him upon that enquiry. Locke.

Scripture proof was never the talent of these men, and 'tis no wonder they are foiled. Atterbury.
Why are scripture maxims put upon us, without taking notice of scripture examples, that he cros them? Atterbury.
The Author of nature and the scriptures has expressly enjoined, that he who will not work shall not eat. Scd.

SCRIVENER. n. f. [scrivano, Latin.]

1. One who draws contracts.
We'll pass the business privately and well:
Send for your daughter to your servant here,
My boy shall fetch the scrivener. Shakespeare.

2. One whose business is to place money at interest.
How happy in his low degree,
Who leads a quiet country life,
And from the griping scrivener free! Dryden.
I am reduced to beg and borrow from scriveners and attorneys, that suck the heart and blood. Arbuthnot.

SCROFULA. n. f. [from scrofa, Latin, a sow, as scroga.] A deprivation of the humours of the body, which breaks out in sores, commonly called the kingevil.
It matter in the milk disposes to conagulation, it produces a scrofula. Weyman.

SCROFULOUS. adj. [from scrofula.] Diseased with the scrofula.
Scrofulous persons can never be duly nourished;
for such as have tumours in the parotides often have them in the pancreas and mesentery. Arbuthnot.
English consumptions generally proceed from a scrofulous disposition. Arbuthnot.

What would become of the race of men, if the best of us, if we had nothing to trust to, but the scraps of consumptive production, grumbled by our own wit and pleasure? Swift.
SCROLL. n. f. [supposed by Minshew to be corrupted from roll; by Skinner derived from an escrouelle given by the heralds: whence parchment, wrapped up into a resembling form, has the same name. It may be observed, that a gaoler's list of prisoners is escrou.] A writing wrapped up.

His chamber all was hang'd about with rolls,
And old records from ancient times deriv'd;
Some made in books, some in long parchment scrolls,
That were all worm-eaten, and full of canker holes.
Spenser.

We'll add a royal number to the dead,
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.
Shakespeare.

Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit through all Athens to play in our interlude. Shakespeare.

A Numidian priest, bellowing out certain superstitious charms, cast divers scrolls of paper on each side the way, wherein he curied and banned the christians. Knolles.

He drew forth a scroll of parchment, and delivered it to our foremost man.
Such follow him, as shall be register'd;
Part good, part bad: of bad the longer scroll.
Milton.

With this epistolary scroll,
Receive the partner of my utmost soul.
Yet, if he wills, may change or spoil the whole;
May take you beautiful, my tick, it carry roll,
And burn it like an useless parchment scroll. Prior.

SCROYLE. n. f. [This word I remember only in Shakespeare: it seems derived from escrouelle, French, a scrofulous swelling; as he calls a mean fellow a scab from his itch, or a patch from his raggedness.]
A mean fellow; a rascal; a wretch.

The scroyles of Angers flout you kings,
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre. King John.

To SCRUB. v. a. [scrubben, Dutch.] To rub hard with something coarse and rough.

Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw,
For an old grandam ape, when with a grace
She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face. Dryd.
She never would lay aside the use of brooms and scrubbing brushes. Arbuthnot.

Now Moll had whirl'd her mop with dextrous airs,
Prepar'd to scrub the entry and the stairs. Swift.

perplexity: generally about minute things.

Macedoff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul

Wip'd the black scruples, recall'd my thoughts
To your good truth. Shakespeare.

Nothing did more fill foreign nations with admiration of his succession, than the consent of all estates of England for the receiving of the king without the least scruple, point, or question. Bacon.

For the matter of your confession, less be severe and serious; but yet to as it may be without any inordinate anxiety, and unnecessary scruples, which only entangle the souls. Taylor.

Men make no scruple to conclude, that those professions, of whose knowledge they can find in themselves no original, were certainly the impress of God and nature upon their minds, and not taught them by any one else. Locke.

2. Twenty grains; the third part of a drain.

Milk one ounce, oil of triol a scruple, dash con-sistate the milk at the bottom, where the triol goeth. Brown.

3. Proverbially, any small quantity.

Nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence;
But, like a charity, goddets, she determines Herself the glory of a creditor. Shakespeare.

To SCRUPLE. v. n. [from the noun.]
To doubt, to hesitate.

He scrupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge; not deceiv'd,
But fairly overcome with female charms. Milton.

SCRUPLE. n. f. [from scruple.] A doubter; one who has scruples.

The scruples which many publick ministers would make of the worthiness of parents to have their children baptiz'd, forced such questioned parents, who did not believe the necessity of having their children baptiz'd by such scruplers, to carry their children unto other ministers. Graunt.

SCRUPULOSITY. n. f. [from scrupulous.]

1. Doubt; minute and nice doubtfulness.
The one sort they warn'd to take heed, that scru-pulosity did not make them rigorous in giving unad-vised sentence against their brethren which were free; the other, that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty and freedom to the offence of their weak brethren, which were scrupulous. Hooker.

So careful, even to scrupulosity, were they to keep their sabbath, that they must not only have a time to prepare them for that, but a further time also to prepare them for their very preparations. South.

2. Fear of acting in any manner; tenderness of conscience.

The first sacrifice is looked on with horror; but when they have made the breach, their scrupulosity soon retires. Deacy of Piety.

a dish or platter which it resembles in form.

A scuttle or skem to rid soil fro' the corn. Tusser.
The earth and stones they are tan to carry from under their feet in scuttles and buckets. Hawthill.

2. A small grate.

To the hole in the door have a small scuttle, to keep in what fire are there. Mortimer.

3. [from scud.] A quick pace; a short run;
a pace of affected precipitation. This is properly scuddle.

She went with an easy scuttle out of the shop. Spekator.

To SCUTTLE, v. n. [from scud or scuddle.]
To run with affected precipitation.

The old fellow scuttled out of the room. Arbuthnot.

To SDEIGN, v. a. [Spenser, Sdegnare, Italian; Milton, for disdain.]

Lifted up to high,
I sdeign'd (subjected). Milton.

SDEIGNFUL, adj. [Contracted for disdainful.]

They now, puff up with sdeignful insolence, Despise the brood of blessed sapience. Spenser.

SEA, n. f. [see, Sax. see, or see, Dutch.]

1. The ocean; the water, opposed to the land.

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather Thy multitudinous sea incarnadine, Making the green one red. Shakespeare.

The rivers run into the sea. Cicero.
He made the sea and all that is therein. Exodus.

So do the winds and thunders cleanse the air
So working seas settle and purge the wine. Davies.
Amphibious, between sea and land, Milton.

The river horse.
Some Leviathan,
Haply slumbering on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd ship
Dreaming some island, oft as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea. Milton.

Small fragments of shells, broken by storms on some shores, are used for manuring of sea land. Woodward.

They put to sea with a fleet of three hundred sail. Arbuthnot.

Sea racing dolphins are train'd for our motion,
Moony tides swelling to roll us ashore. Dryden.

But like a rock unmov'd, a rock that braves
The raging tempest and the rising waves,
Propp'd on himself he stands: his solid sides
Walk off the sea weeds, and the sounding tides. Dryden.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is,
without a great loss to the world. Bentley.

So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain,
While Argos saw her kindred trees
Descend from Pelion to the main. Pope.

2. A collection of water; a lake.
By the sea of Galilee. Matthew.

3. Proverbially for any large quantity.
That sea of blood, which hath in Ireland been barbarously shed, is enough to drown in eternal infamy and misery the malicious author and instigator of its effusion. King Charles.

4. Any thing rough and tempestuous.
To sorrow abandon'd, but worse felt within,
And in a troubled sea of passion tost. Milton.

5. Half SEAS over. Half drunk.
The whole magistracy was pretty well disguised before I gave 'em the slip. our friend the alderman was half seas over before the bonfire was out.
Speator.

SEA is often used in composition, as will appear in the following examples.

SEABAR. n. f. [from sea and bar; hirundo piscis, Latin.] The sea swallow.

SEABEAT. adj. [sea and beat.] Dashed by the waves of the sea.

The sovereign of the seas he blames in vain,
That one sea-beat will to sea again. Spenser.
Darkness cover'd o'er

The face of things: along the sea-beat shore Satiate we slept. Pope.

SEABOAT. n. f. [sea and boat] Vessel capable to bear the sea.

Shipwrecks were occasioned by their ships being bad sea-boats, and themselves but indifferent sea-men.
Arbuthnot

SEABORN: adj. [sea and born.] Born of the sea; produced by the sea.

Like Neptune and his sea-born niece, shall be
The shining glories of the land and sea. Waller.
All these in order march, and marching sing
The warlike actions of their sea-born king.
Dryden

SEABOY. n. f. [sea and boy.] Boy employed on shipboard.

Canst thou, O partial sleep! give thy repose
To the wet sea-boy in an hour to rude,
And in the calmest and the stillest night
Deny it to a king? Shakespeare.

SEABREACH. n. f. [sea and breach.] Irruption of the sea by breaking the banks.

To an importunate woman, tempests and sea-breaches are nothing. L'Estrange.

SEABREEZE. n. f. [sea and breeze.] Wind blowing from the sea.

Hedges, in most places, would be of great advantage to shelter the grass from the sea-breeze. Mortimer.

SEABUILT. adj. [sea and built.] Built for the sea.

None catch by other in a distant line,
The sea-built forts in dreadful order move. Dryden

SEACABBAGE. n. f. [crambe, Lat.] Sea colewort. A plant.

It hath fleshy leaves like those of the cabbage. Miller.

SEACALF. n. f. [sea and calf; phoca.] The seal.

The seacalf, or seal, is so called from the noise he makes like a calf: his head comparatively not large, shaped rather like an otter's, with teeth like a dog's, and mustaches like those of a cat: his body long, and all over hairy: his forefeet, with fingers clawed, but not divided, yet fit for going: his hinder feet, more properly fins, and fitted for swimming, as being an amphibious animal. The female gives suck, as the porpoise, and other cetaceous fishes. Gruen.

SEACAP. n. f. [sea and cap] Cap made to be worn on shipboard.

I know your favour well,
Though now you have no sea-cap on your head. Shakespeare.

SEACORMORANT, or Seadrake, n. f. [from sea and cormorant; corvus marinus, Lat.] A sea-crow.

SEACOW. n. f. [sea and cow.] The manatee.

The sea-cow is of the cetaceous kind. It grows to fifteen feet long, and to seven or eight in circumference; its head is like that of a hog, but longer, and more cylindrical: its eyes are small, and it has no external ears, but only two little apertures. Its lips are thick, and it has two long tusks standing out. It has two fins, which stand forward on the breast like hands, whence the Spaniards called it manatee. The female has two round breasts placed between the pectoral fins. The skin is very thick and hard, and not leathery, but hairy. Hill.

SEADOG. n. f. [sea and dog.] Perhaps the shark.

Pierce sea-dogs devour the mangled friends
When, stung with hunger, she embroils the flood.
The sea-dog and the dolphin are her food. Pope.

SEAEAR. n. f. [from sea and ear; auris marina, Latin.] A sea plant.

SEAFARER. n. f. [sea and farer.] A traveller by sea; a mariner.

They finally refused to sail their bonnets by the summons of those towns, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by the better enabled sea-farers. Cicero.

A wandering merchant, he frequents the main,
Some mean sea-farer in pursuit of gain;
Stodious of freight, in naval trade well skill'd,
But dreads the athletic labours of the field. Pope.

SEAFARING. adj. [sea and farer.] Travel-ling by sea.

My wife laden'd him unto a small spare mast,
Such as sea-faring men provide for storms. Shakespeare.

SEAFENSEL. The same with SAMPHIRE.

SEAFIGHT. n. f. [sea and fight.] Battle of ships; battle on the sea.

Sea-fights have been often fatal to the war; but this is when princes sit up their rest upon the battles. Bacon.

It our sense of hearing were a thousand times quicker than it is, we should, in the quietest retirement, be less able to sleep than in the middle of a sea-fight. Locke.

This fleet they recruited with two hundred sail, whereof they lost ninety-three in a sea-fight. Arbuthnot.

SEA

SEAFOWL. n. f. [sea and fowl.] Birds that live at sea.

The bills of curlews, and many other sea-fowls, are very long, to enable them to hunt for the worms.

A sea-fowl properly represents the passage of a deity over the sea.

A length of ocean and unbounded sky,
Which scarce the sea-fowl in a year o'er-hy. Pope.

SEAGIRDLES. n. f. pl. [fungus phaeonoides, Latin.] A sort of sea mushroom.

SEAGIRT. adj. [sea and girt.] Girded or encircled by the sea.

Neptune, besides the sway
Of every salt flood and each ebbing stream,
Took in by lot, with high and nether Jove, Imperial rule of all the sea-girt seas. Milton.

Telenuchus, the blooming heir,
Of sea-girt Ithaca, demands my care
'Tis mine to form his green unpractis'd year
In sage debates. Pope.

SEAGRASS. n. f. [from sea and grass; algæ, Latin.] An herb growing on the seashore.

SEAGREEN. adj. [sea and green.] Reflecting the colour of the distant sea; cerulean.

White, red, yellow, blue, with their several mixtures, as green, scarlet, purple, and saffron, come in by the eyes. Isid.

Upon his urn reclin'd,
His sea-green mantle waving in the wind,
The god appear'd. Pope.

SEAGREEN. n. f. Saxifrage. A plant.

SEAGULL. n. f. [sea and gull.] A water-fowl.

Seagulls, when they flock together from the sea towards the shores, forebode rain and wind. Isid.
Bitterns, herons, and seagulls, are great enemies to fish. Motus.

SEAHEDGEHOG. n. f. [echinus.] A kind of sea shellfish.

The sea-hedgehog is inclosed in a round shell, fashioned as a loaf of bread, wrought and polished, and guarded by an outer skin full of prickles, as the land urchin. Cicero.

Cor. wal brings forth greater store of fish and lime than any other country. Cicero.

SEAHORSE. n. f. [sea and horse.]

1. A fish of a very singular form, as we see it dried, and of the needlefish kind. It is about four or five inches in length, and nearly half an inch in diameter in the broadest part. Its colour, as we see dried, is a deep reddish brown; and its tail is turned round under the belly. Hill.

2. The morse.
Part of a large tooth, round and tapering, and of the morse, or walrus, called by some the seahorse. Waller.

3. The medical and the poetical sea-horse seem very different. By the sea-horse Dryden means probably the hippocampus.

Seahorses, round'ring in the slimy mud,
Toss'd up their heads, and dash'd the oars about 'em. Dryden.

SEAMaid. n. f. [sea and maid.] Mermaid.

Certain fairs that from their spheres,
To bear the framids music. Shakespeare.

SEAMAN. n. f. [sea and man.]

1. A sailor; a navigator; a mariner.

SEA

She, looking out,
Abolds the fleet, and hears the seamen shout.

Seamen, through dismal storms, are wont
To pass the oyster-breeding Hellespont. Evelyn.
Aeneas order'd

Stately tomb, whose top a trumpet bore,
Soldier's falchion, and a seaman's oar;
But was his friend interr'd. Dryden.

By undergoing the hazards of the sea, and the company of common seamen, you make it evident you will refuse no opportunity of rendering yourself useful. Dryden.

Had they applied themselves to the increase of their strength by sea, they might have had the most fleet, and the most seamen, of any state in Europe. Addison.

Merman; the male of the mermaid.
Seals live at land and at sea, and porpoises have a warm blood and entrails of a hog, not to mention mermaids or seamen. Locke.

SEAMARK. n. f. [sea and mark.] Point or conspicuous place distinguished at sea, and serving the mariners as directions of their course.

Those white rocks,
Which all along the southern seacoast lay,
Threatning unheedy wreck and rash decay,
He for his lady's sake his seamark made;
And nam'd it Albion. Fairy Queen

Though you do see me weapon'd,
Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,
The very seamark of my utmost sail. Shakespeare.

They were executed at divers places upon the seacoast, for seamarks, or light-houses, to teach Perkins's people to avoid the coast. Bacon.

They are remembered with a brand of infamy set upon them, and set as seamarks for those who obscure them to avoid. Dryden.

The fault of others sway
He set as seamarks for himself to shun. Dryden.

SEAW. n. f. [sea and new.] A fowl that frequents the sea.

An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals, and orks, and seaw clang. Milton.

seel, Danish.] The seal.

The seal or toyle is in make and growth not unlike a pig, ugly faced, and footed like a moldwarp; he delighteth in music, or any loud noise, and thereby is trained to shew himself above water: they also come on land. Carew.

An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals, and orks, and seaw clang. Milton.

SEAL. n. f. [sigel, Saxon; sigillum, Lat.]

1. A stamp engraved with a particular impression, which is fixed upon the wax that closes letters, or affixed as a testimony.

The king commands you
To render up the great seal. Shakespeare.

If the organs of perception, like wax overhardened with cold, will not receive the impression of the seal;
or, like wax of a temper too soft, will not hold it;
or else supposing the wax of a temper fit, but the seal not applied with a sufficient force to make a clear impression: in any of these cases the print left by the seal will be obscure. Locke.

The same his grandfire wore about his neck
In three seal rings; which after, melted down, Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown. Pope.

2. The impression made in wax.
Till thou canst rail the seal from off my bond,
Thou hast offend'd thy lungs to speak so loud. Shakespeare.

Solyman shew'd him his own letters, asking him if he knew not that hand, and if he knew not that seal? Knolles.

He saw his monkey picking the seal wax from a letter. Arbuthnot.

3. Any act of confirmation.
They their fill of love

Took largely, of their mutual guilt the seal. Milton.

TO SEAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with a seal.
He that brings this love to thee,
Little knows this love in me,
And by him seal up thy mind. Shakespeare.

I have seen her rise from her bed, take forth paper, told it, write upon it, and afterwards seal it. Shakespeare.

2. To confirm or attest by a seal.
God join'd my heart to Romeo's, thou our hands;
And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the lab to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both. Shallsp.

3. To confirm; to ratify; to settle.
My soul is purg'd from grudging hate,
And with my hand I seal our true hearts love. Shakespeare.

When I have performed this, and seal'd to them this fruit, I will come into Spain. Romans.

4. To shut; to close; with up.
Seal up your lips, and give no words but mum! Shakespeare.

At my death
Thou hast seal'd up my expectation. Shakespeare.

The seal is like the sun; for the sun seals up the globe of heaven; and opens the globe of earth: so the seal doth obscure heavenly things, and reveals earthly things. Bacon.

5. To make fast.
Back to th' internal pit I drag thee chain'd,
And seal thee so, as henceforth not to loam.
The fatal gates of hell too slightly barr'd. Milton.

6. To mark with a stamp.
You'd rail upon the hostess,
And say you would present her at the feet,
Because she bought those jugs, and no seal'd quarts. Shakespeare.

TO SEAL. v. n. To fix a seal,
I will seal unto this bond. Shakespeare.

We make a sure covenant and write it, and our princes and priests seal unto it. Nehemiah.

hidden idea, and turns the eye of the soul upon it. Locke.

3. Inquiry; act of seeking: with of, for, or after.

His reasoners are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff: you shall seek all day ere you find them, and when you have them they are not worth the search. Shakespeare.

Who went in search of God and nature grow,
They best the wife Creator's praise declare. Dryden.

Now morn thy fatal search:
It's not safe to have too quick a sense. Dryden.

By the philosophical use of words, I mean such as are not only the precise notions of things which the mind may be satisfied with in its first after knowledge. Locke.

The parents, after a long search for the boy, gave him for drowned in a canal. Addison.

This common practice carries the heart aside from all that is honest in our search after truth. Watts.

a high relish.

Every o'ration of thy meat offering shalt thou season with salt.

They seasoned every sacrifice, whereof a greater part was eaten by the priests.

For breakfast and supper, milk and milk-pottage are very fit for children; only let them not be seasoned with sugar.

The wife contriver,
To keep the waters from corruption free,
Mist them with salt, and season'd all the sea.

2. To give a relish to; to recommend by something mingled.

You season still with sports your serious hours;
For age but tastes of pleasures, youth devours.

The proper use of wit is to season conversation, to represent what is praiseworthy to the greatest advantage, and to expose the vices and follies of mankind.

3. To qualify by admixture of another ingredient.

Mercy is above this scepter'd sway;
It is an attribute to god himself;

And earthly pow'r does then flow likest God's,
When mercy seasons justice.

Season your admiration but a while
With an attentive ear, till I deliver
This marvel to you.

4. To imbue; to tinge or taint.

Whatever thing
The sextile of time mows down, devour unspar'd,
Till I, in mine, reliding, through the race
His thought, his looks, words, actions, all infect,
And season him thy last and sweetest prey.

Secure their religion, season their younger years with prudent and pious principles.

See, taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel, so much of it as it fills, it also seasons the touch and texture go together.

5. To fit for any use by time or habit; to mature.

The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark,
When neither is attended; and, I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren;

How many things by season'd time are
To their right praise and true perfection!

Who in want a hollow friend doth try Directly seasons him his enemy.

We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take from home all season'd office, and to wind yourself into a power tyrannical.

The archers of his guard shot two arrows, every man together, against an inch board of well season'd timber.

His plenteous stores do season'd timber send,
Thither the bawny carpenters repair.

A man should harden and season himself beyond the degree of cold wherein he lives.

TO SEASON. v. n. To become mature; to grow fit for any purpose.

Carpenters rough plane boards for flooring, that they may set them by to season.

SEASONABLE. adj. [saison, Fr.] Opportunity; happening or done at a proper time; proper as to time.

Mercy is seasonable in the time of affliction, as clouds of rain in the time of drought.

If ever it was seasonable to preach courage in the deserted abused cause of Christ, it is now, when his truths are reformed into nothing, when the hands and hearts of his faithful ministers are weakened.

SEASONABLENESS. n. f. [from seasonable.] Opportuneness of time; propriety with regard to time.

A British freeholder would very ill discharge his part, if he did not acknowledge the excellency and probability of those laws by which his country has been recovered out of its confusions.

SEASONABLY. adv. [from seasonable.]
Properly, with respect to time.

This is that to which I would most earnestly, most seasonably, advise you all.

SEASONER. n. f. [from To season.] He who seasons or gives a relish to any thing.

SEASONING. n. f. [from season.] That which is added to any thing to give it a relish.

Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites, and some do nourish as divers do live of them alone.

Some abound with words, without any seasoning or taste of matter.

A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a seasoning to retirement, and make us taste the blessing.

Political speculations are of so dry and austere a nature, that they will not go down with the public without frequent seasonings.

The publick accept a paper which has in it none of those seasonings that recommend the writings which are in vogue among us.

Many vegetable substances are used by mankind as seasonings, which abound with a highly exalted aromatic oil; as thyme and fennel.

SEAT. n. f. [sedes, Lat. sitt, old German, Skinner.]

1. A chair, bench, or any thing on which one may sit.

The fons of light
Hastid, resorting to the fumous high,
And took their seats.

The lady of the least ordain'd a feast,
And made the lady of the flow'r her guest;

When, lo, a bow'r ascended on the plain,
With sudden seats ordain'd, and large for either train.

2. Chair of state; throne; post of authority; tribunal.

With due observance of thy goodly seat,
Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall supply
Thy latest words.

Thus we debase
The nature of our seats, and make the rabble
Call our chairs seats.

Whatever be the manner of the world's end, most certain it is an end it shall have, and as certain that then we shall appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every man may receive according to that which he hath done in his body, whether it be good or evil.

3. Mansion; residence; dwelling; abode.

It were enough in reason to succour with victuals, and other helps, a vast multitude, compelled by necessity to seek a new seat, or to direct them unto a country able to receive them.

O earth, how like to heav'n? if not prefer'd
Most justly, seat worthier of gods, as built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old.

In Alba shall fix his royal seat;
And, born a king, a race of kings beget.

His winter caus'd thee, friend, to change thy seat,
And seek in Sabine air a warm retreat?

The promisd seat of empire shall again
Cover the mountain, and command the plain.

4. Situation; site.

It followeth now that we find out the seat of Eden; for in it was Paradise by God planted.

A church by Strand-bridge, and two bishops houses, were pulled down to make a seat for his new building.

The guests were no sooner seated but they entered into a warm debate.

2. To place in a post of authority, or place of distinction.

Thus high was King Richard seated, Shakspeare,
Not Babylon,

Nor great Alcibiades such magnificence
Equal'd in all their glories, to inhume
Belus or Senapus their gods, or seat
Their kings.

A spirit of envy or opposition makes mankind uneasy to see others of the same species seated above them in a sort of perfection.

3. To fix in any particular place or situation; to settle.

Should one family or one thousand hold possession of all the southern undisturbed continent, because they had seated themselves in Nova Guinea?

By no means build too near a great neighbour, which were, in truth, to be as unfortunately seated on the earth as Mercury is in the heavens; for the most part ever in combustion, or obscurity, under brighter beams than his own.

4. To fix; to place firm.

Why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whole humankind doth upon my hair,
And make my peaked heart knock at my ribs,
Against the idle of nature?

From their foundations loosening to and fro,
They pluck'd the pebbled hills,

SEAWARD. adj. [sea and peard, Saxon.]
Toward the sea.

The rock wall'd seaward with impetuous roars
Engulf'd, and to the abyss the boulder bore.

ceedings by withdrawing himself.

TO SECESS. v. a. [secesso, Lat.] To separate finer from grosser matter; to make the separation of substances in the body.

Birds are better meat than beasts, because their flesh doth assimilate more easily, and is more subtilly.

The pituitous or mucus secreted in the nose and windpipe, is not an excrementitious but a laudable humour, necessary for defending those parts, from which it is secreted, from excoriation.

SECESSION. n. f. [secessio, Latin.]
1. The act of departing.

The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from, the earth's surface, perturb not the equilib-ration of either hemisphere.

2. The act of withdrawing from council's or actions.

SECLE. n. f. [seculo, Fr. seculum, Latin.]
A century. Not in use.

Of a man's age, part he lives in his father's lifetime, and part after his son's birth; and therefore it is wont to be said that three generations make one secul, or hundred years, in the genealogies.

TO SECLUDE. v. d. [secludo, Lat.] To confine from; to shut up apart; to exclude.

None is secluded from that function, of any degree, state, or calling.

Some parts of knowledge God has thought fit to seclude from us; to fence them not only, as by the interdicted tree, by combination, but with im-possibilities.

The number of birds described by the ancients is about a hundred, and of fishes including shell-fish, as many but, if the shell fish be taken in, more than two hundred.

Include your tender plants in your conservatory,
excluding all entrance of cold.

Let eastern tyrants from the light of heaven
Seclude their basest slaves.

SECOND. adj. [secund, Fr. secundus, Lat.]
It is observable, that the English have no

ordinal of two; as the Latins, and the nations deriving from them, have none of duo. What the Latins call secundus, from sequor, the Saxons term oðer, or anþer.]

1. The next in order to the first; the ordinal of two.

Sunk were their hearts with horror of the crime,
Nor needed to be warn'd a second time,
But borg each other back. Dryden.

2. Next in value or dignity; inferior.
- I shall not speak superlatively of them, lest I be suspected of partiality; but this I may truly say, they are second to none in the christian world. Bacon.

None I know
Second to me, or like, equal much less. Milton.
My eyes are full the same; each glance, each grace,

Keep their first lustre, and maintain their place,
Not second yet to any other face. Dryden.

Not these huge bolts, by which the giants slain
Lay overthrown on the Phlegrean plain:
'Twas of a lesser mould and lighter weight;
They call it thunder of a second rate. Addison.

By a sad train of miseries alone
Distinguish'd long, and second now to none. Pope.
Persons of second rate merit in their own country, like birds of passage, thrive here, and fly off when their employments are at an end. Swift.

SECONd-HAND. n. f. Possession received from the first possessor.

SECONd-HAND is sometimes used adjectively. Not original; not primary.

1. To support; to forward; to assist; to come in after the act as a maintainer.

The authors of the former opinion were presently seconded by other wittier and better learned, who being loth that the form of church polity, which they sought to bring in, should be otherwise than in the highest degree accounted of, took first an exception against the difference between church polity and matters of necessity to salvation. Hooker.

Though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt;
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them. Shakspeare.

I to be the power of Israel's God
Avow, and challenge Dagon to the test,
Offering to combat thee, his champion bold,
With th' utmost of his godhead seconded. Milton.

Familiar Ovid tender thoughts inspires,
And nature second all his soft desires. Johnson.

If in company you offer something for a jest, and nobody second you in your laughter, you may condemn their taste; but in the mean time you make a very indifferent figure. Swift.

In human work, though labour'd on with pain,
A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain;
In God's, one single can its ends produce,
Yet serves to second too some other use. Pope.

2. To follow in the next place.

You come permit
To second ill with ill. Shakspeare.

They have a similitude or contrariety to the secretious humours in taste and quality. Floyer.
SECRETEST. n. f. [from secret.] A dealer in secrets.
Some things I have not yet thought fit so plainly to reveal; not out of any envious design of having them buried with me, but that I may barter with those secrets, that will not part with one secret but in exchange for another. Boyle.
SECRETLY. adv. [from secret.]
1. Privately; privily; not openly; not publicly; with intention not to be known.

SEC

Give him this letter, do it secretly. Shakspere.
Now secretly with inward grief he pin'd;
Now warm resentments to his griefs he join'd.
Addison.
Some may place their chief satisfaction in giving secretly what is to be distributed; others, in being the open and avowed instruments of making such distributions. Atterbury.
2. Latently; so as not to be obvious; not apparently.
Those thoughts are not wholly mine; but either they are secretly in the poet, or may be fairly deduced from him. Dryden.
SECRETNES. n. f. [from secret.]
1. State of being hidden.
2. Quality of keeping a secret.
I could muller up
My giants and my witches too,
Which are vast confus'd and secreted. Donne.
SECRETO'RY. adj. [from secretus, Latin.] Performing the office of secretion, or animal separation.
All the glands are a congeries of vessels complicated together, whereby they give the blood time to separate through the capillary vessels into the secretory, which afterwards exonerate themselves into one duct. Hay.
SECT. n. f. [secte, Fr. secta, Lat. from sectando.]
1. A body of men following some particular matter, or united in some settled tenets. Often in a bad sense.
We'd wear out,
In a wall'd prison, packs and sects of great ones,
That ebb and flow by th' moon. Shakspere.
The greatest vicissitude of things is the vicissitude of sects and religions: the true religion is built upon a rock; the rest are tossed upon the waves of time. Bacon.
The jealous sects, that dare not trust their cause
So far from their own will as to the laws,
You for their empire and their sword take. Druid.
The academics were willing to admit the goods of fortune into their notion of felicity; but no sects of old philosophers did ever leave a room for greatness.
A sect of freethinkers is a fum of cyphers. Dryden.
2. In Shakspere it seems to be misprinted for set.
Of our unbated lusts, I take this that you call love to be a sect or cion. Othello.
SECTARISM. n. f. [from sect.] Disposition to petty sects, in opposition to things established.
Nothing hath more marks of schism and sectarism than this presbyterian way. King Charles.
SECTARY. n. f. [sectaire, French; from sect.]
1. One who divides from publick establishment, and joins with those distinguished by some particular whims.
My lord, you are a sectary, Shakspere.
That's the plain truth.
Roman catholic tenets are inconsistent, on the one hand, with the truth of religion professed and professed by the church of England, whence we are called protestants, and the anabaptists, and separatists, and sectaries, on the other hand, whose tenets are full of schism, and inconsistent with monarchy. Bacon.
The number of sectaries does not concern the clergy in point of interest or conscience. Suff.
2. A follower; a pupil.
The sectaries of my celestial skill,
That wou'd be the world's chief ornament,
They under keep. Spenser.
SECTA'TOR. n. f. [sectateur, French; sectator, Latin.] A follower; an imitator;
a disciple.
Hereof the wiser sort and the best learned philosophers were not ignorant, as Cicero witnesseth, gathering the opinion of Aristotle and his followers. Raleigh.

SECTION. n. f. [section, French; sectio,
Latin.]
1. The act of cutting or dividing.
In the section of bodies, man, of all sensible creatures, has the fullest brain to his proportion. Watson.
2. A part divided from the rest.
3. A final and distinct part of a writing or book.
Instead of their law, which they might not read openly, they read, of the prophets, that which in likeness of matter came nearest to each section of their law. Hooker.
The production of volatile salts I reserve till I mention them in another section. Boyle.
Without breaking in upon the connection of his language, it is hardly possible to give a distinct view of his several arguments in distinct sections. Locke.
SECTOR. n. f. [secteur, French.] In geometry.
Sector is an instrument made of wood or metal, with a point, and sometimes a piece to turn out to make a true square, with lines of sines, tangents, secants, equal parts, rhombs, polygons, hours, latitudes, metals, and solids. It is generally useful in all the practical parts of the mathematics, and particularly contriv'd for navigation, surveying, astronomy, dialling, and projection of the sphere.
All the lines of the sector can be accommodated to any radius, which is done by taking off all divisions parallelwise, and not lengthwise; the ground of which practice is this, that parallels to the base of any plain triangle bear the same proportion to it as the parts of the legs above the parallel do to the whole legs. Harris.
SECULAR. adj. [secularis, Latin; secular, French.]
1. Not spiritual; relating to affairs of the present world; not holy; worldly.
This, in every several man's actions of common life, appeareth unto him, as a publick and politick secular affairs. Hooker.
Then shall the

SECULARITY. n. f. [from secular.] Worldliness; attention to the things of the present life.
Lascivious and secularity of spirit is the greatest enemy to contemplation. Barnet.
To SECULARIZE. v. a. [seculariser, Fr.
from secular.]
1. To convert from spiritual appropriations to common use.
2. To make worldly.
SECULARLY. adv. [from secular.] In a worldly manner.
SECULARNESS. n. f. [from secular.] Worldliness.
SECUNDINE. n. f. [secondines, secondes, French; secundæ, viz. partes, quod nas-centem infantem sequuntur. Antworth.]
The membrane in which the embryo is wrapped; the afterbirth.
The casting of the fun is by the ancients compared to the breaking of the secundine, or cawl, but not rightly; for the secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the part, but the fun is. Bacon.

Future ages be Wrapp'd in their curies, grandius asleep. Cowley.
If the curies be taken out of the womb inclosed in the curies, it will continue to live, and the blood to circulate. Ray.

SECURE, adj. [securus, Latin.]

1. Free from fear; exempt from terror; easily; assured.

Confidence then bore thee on securus
To meet no danger. Milton.

2. Confident; not distrustful; with of.
But thou, securus of soul, unbent with woes,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppose. Dryden.

One maid she hath, below'd above the rest,
Sequitur of her, the securus she confests'd. Dryden.

The portion of their wealth they design for the uses of the poor, they may throw into one of these publick repositories, securus that it will be well employed. Atterbury.

3. Sure; not doubting; with of.

Reply too securus of our discharge
From penalty. Milton.

It concerns the most securus of his strength, to pay to securus to expose him to an enemy. Rogers.

In securus lake souls long oblivion taste;
Of future life securus, forgetful of the past. Dryden.

We live and act as if we were perfectly securus of the final event of things, however we may behave ourselves. Atterbury.

4. Careless; wanting caution; wanting vigilance.

Gideon smote the host, for the host were securus.
Judges.

5. Free from danger; safe.

Let us not then suspect our happy state,
As not securus to single or comb'd. Milton.

The done like Hector, but securus done,
A little proudly, and great deal securus doing.
The knight oppos'd. Shakespeare.

His during too securus him defy'd.
A soul that can securus death defy,
And count it nature's privilege to die. Dryden.

Whether any of the reasonings are incoherent, I securus leave to the judgment of the reader.
Atterbury.

2. Without danger; safely.

We upon our globe's last verge shall go,
And view the ocean leaning on the sky;
From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,
And on the lunar world securus pry. Dryden.

SECUREMENT, n. f. [securus, Latin.] The cause of safety; protection; defence.

They, like Judas, desire death; Cain, on the contrary, grew afraid thereof, and obtained a securus from it. Brown.

SECURITY, n. f. [securus, Fr. securitas,
Latin; from securus.]

1. Carelessness; freedom from fear.

Marvellous securus is always dangerous, when men will not believe any bees to be in a hive, until they have a sharp fence of their stings. Haywood.

2. Vitious carelessness; confidence; want of vigilance.

How faint left then and dead a soul hath he,
Which thinks his soul doth with his body die;
Or thinks not so, but would have it be,
That he might fit with more securus? Davies.

3. Protection; defence;

If the providence of God be taken away, what securus have we against the innumerable dangers to which human nature is continually exposed? Tillotson.

4. Any thing given as a pledge or caution; insurance; assurance for any thing; the act of giving caution, or being bound.

There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies securus; but securus enough to make fellowsships accurst. Shakespeare.

When they had taken securus of Jason, they let them go. Acts.

It is possible for a man, who hath the appearance of religion, to be wicked and an hypocrite; but it is impossible for a man, who openly declares against religion, to give any reasonable securus that he will not be false and cruel. Swift.

Each other bills have been generally reckoned the surest and most sacred of all securities. Swift.

The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon morgages. Arbuthnot.

5. Safety; certainty.

Some, who gave their advice for entering into a war, alleged that we should have no securus for our trade, while Spain was subject to a prince of the Bourbon family. Swift.

SEDAN, n. f. A kind of portable coach;
a chair. I believe because first made at Sedan.

Some beg for absent persons, feign them sick,
Close mew'd in their sedans for want of air,
And for their wives produce an empty chair. Dryden.

By a tax of Cato's it was provided, that women's wearing cloaths, ornament, and sedan, exceeding 1214. 1s. 10d. halfpenny, should pay 30s. in the hundred pound value. Arbuthnot.

SEDATE, adj. [sedatus, Latin.] Calm; quiet; still; unruffled; undisturbed;

serene.

With countenance calm and soul sedate,
Thus turns. Dryden.

Disputation carries away the mind from that calm and sedate temper which is necessary to contemplate truth. Watts.

SEDATELY, adv. [sedate, Latin.] Calmly;
without disturbance.

That has most weight with them that appears sedately to come from their parents reason. Locke.

SEDATENESS, n. f. [sedate, Latin.] Calmness; tranquillity; serenity; freedom from disturbance.

There is a particular sedateness in their constitution and behaviour that qualifies them for constant, with a great impetuosity that fits them for action. Addison.

SEDENTARINESS, n. f. [sedentarius, Latin.]

The state of being sedentary; inactivity.

SEDENTARY, adj. [sedentarius, Fr. se- dentario, Italian; sedentarius, from sedere,
Latin.]

1. Pushed in sitting still; wanting motion or action.

A sedentary life, appropriate to all students, crushes the bowels; and, for want of turning the body, suffers the spirits to lie dormant. Harvey.

The blood of labouring people is more dense and heavy than of those who live a sedentary life. Arbuthnot.

2. Torpid; inactive; sluggish; motionless.

The sedentary couch,
That better might with far less compass move,
Serv'd by more noble than herself, attains
Her end without least motion. Milton.

Till length of years,
And sedentary numbness, crase my limbs
To a contemptible old age obdurate. Milton.

The soul, considered abstractedly from its passions, is of a remiss sedentary nature, slow in its motions, and languishing in its executions. Newton.

SEDF, n. f. [seag, Saxon; whence, in the provinces, a narrow flag is called;
seag or seag.] A growth of narrow flags;
a narrow flag.

The current, that with gentle murmur glides,
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
But when his fair course is not hinder'd,
He makes sweet music with the enamell'd stones.
Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge.
He overtakes in his pilgrimage;
And so by many winding nooks he strays,
With willing sport, to the wild ocean. Shakespeare.

Adonis, painted by a running brook,
And Cytherea all in sedges hid;
Which seem to move and wanton with her breast.
Even as the waving sedges play with wind. Shakespeare.

In hotter countries a fly called sedeciole, that flieseth as the glow-worm, is chiefly upon seag and marshes; yet is not seen but in the height of summer, and seag or other green of the same green as good shade as bushes. Bacon.

He hid himself in the sedges adjoining. Sandys.

My bonds I break,
Fled from my guards, and in a muddy lake,
Amongst the sedges, all the night lay hid. Davies.

Niphates, with inverted urn,
And drooping seag, shall his Armenia mourn. Dryden.

SENGY, adj. [seag, Latin.] Overgrown with narrow flags.

On the gentle Severn's seag bank,
In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an hour,
In changing hardiment with great Glendower. Shakespeare.

Old father Thames rais'd up his reverend head,
But fear'd the fate of Nimrod would return:
Deep in his ooze he sought his seag bed,
And shrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.

SEDIMENT, n. f. [sedimentum, French; sed- imentum, Latin.] That which subsides; settles at the bottom.

The salt water rises into a kind of foam on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom, and so is rather a separation than an evaporation. Boyle.

It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. Boyle.

That matter sunk not down till last of all, settling at the surface of the sediment, and covering all the rest. Woodward.

SEDITION, n. f. [sedition, French; sedition, Latin.] A tumult; an insurrection; a popular commotion; an uproar.

That son mine brew'd a show'r for him,
That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France,
And heap'd sedition on his crown at home. Shakespeare.

In soothing them we nourish, gainst our Senate,
 the cockle of rebellion, insurrection, sedition. Shaksp.
EDITION, adj. [sedition, French;
sedition, Latin.] Factionous with tumult;
 turbulent.

The cause, why I have brought this army hither, to remove proud Somerset from the king,
 to his grace and to the state. Shaksp.
 Very many of the nobility in Edenborough, at at time, did not appear yet in this sedition because. Clarendon.

Thou return'st from flight, sedition angel. Milton.
 But if he has deform'd this earthly life with murderous rapine and sedition strife, a everlasting darkness must he lie;
 till more unhappy that he cannot die. Prior.
EDITION, adv. [from sedition.] Tu-multuously; with factionous turbulence.
EDITION, n. f. [from sedition.]
 Turbulence; disposition to sedition.
SEDUCE, v. a. [seduco, Lat. seduire, French.] To draw aside from the right;
 to tempt; to corrupt; to deprave; to mislead; to deceive.

"His meet hat noble minds keep ever with their likes;
 or who to firm that cannot be seduced? Shaksp.
 Me the gold of France did not seduce, although I did admit it as a motive he sooner to effect what I intended. Shaksp.
 A beauty-warming and distressed widow seduced the pitch and height of all his thoughts to his declaration. Shaksp.

In the latter times some shall depart from the path, giving heed to seducing spirits. 1 Tim.
 I shall never gratify the spitefulness of a few who by sinister thoughts of all their allegiance, whom pious frauds have seduced. King Charles.
 Subtle he needs must be who could seduce
 Angels. Milton.

Not let false friends seduce thy mind to fame,
 by arrogating Junius's hostile name;
 let father Flecknoe fire thy mind with praise,
 And uncle Ogleby thy envy raise. Dryden.
EDUCEMENT, n. f. [from seduce.] Practice of seduction; art or means used in order to seduce.

To seduce them, and win them early to the love of virtue and true labour, ere any flattering seduce- ment or vain principle seize them wandering, loose and delightful book of education should be read to them. Milton.

Her hero's dangers touch'd the pitying pow'r,
 The nymph's seductions, and the insick bow'r. Pope.

EDUCER, n. f. [from seduce.] One who draws aside from the right; a tempter;
 a corrupter.

Grant it me, O king; otherwise a seducer flounder, and a poor maid is undone. Shaksp.
 There is a teaching by restraining seducers, and removing the hindrances of knowledge. South.
 The soft seducer, with enticing looks,

He bellow, grivels to the sight provokes. Dryden.
 He, whose firm faith no reason could remove,
 Will melt before that soft seducer, love. Dryden.

EDUCIBLE, adj. [from seduce.] Cor-ruptible; capable of being drawn aside from the right.

The vicious example of ages past seduces the curiosity of the present, affording a hint of his autoseducible spirits. Brown.

We owe much of our error to the power which our affections have over our so easily seducible understandings. Glauville.

SEDUCTION, n. f. [seduction, Fr. seductus, Lat.] The act of seducing; the act of drawing aside.

Whatsoever men's faith, patience, or perseverance were, any remarkable indulgence to this sin, the seduction of Balaam, was sure to bring judgments. Hammond.

To procure the miseries of others in those extorments, wherein we hold an hope to have no society ourselves, is a strain above Lucifer, and a project beyond the primary seduction of hell. Brown.

The deceiver soon found out this lost place of Adam's, and innocency itself did not secure him from this way of seduction. Glauville.

Helen ascribes her seduction to Venus, and mentions nothing of Paris. Pope.

A woman who is above flattery, and despises all praise but that which flows from the approbation of her own heart, is, morally speaking, out of reach of seduction. Clarissa.

SEDULITY, n. f. [sedulitas, Lat.] Diligent assiduity; laboriousness; industry;
 application; intenseness of endeavour.

Man oftentimes pursues, with great sedulity and earnestness, that which cannot stand him in any stead for vital purpose. Hooder.

Let there be but the same propensity and heat of will to religion, and there will be the same se-dulity and indefatigable industry in men's enquiries into it. South.

SEDULOUS, adj. [sedulus, Lat.] Affi-duous; industrious; laborious; diligent;
 painful.

Not sedulous by nature to indite
 Wars, hitherto the only argument Heroick deem'd. Milton.

What signifies the sound of words in prayer, without the affection of the heart, and a sedulous application of the proper means that may naturally lead us to such an end. 1. E. Strange.

The goat, now bright amidst her fellow stars,
 Kind Amalthaea, reach'd her teat, dissent
 With milk, thy early food: the sedulous bee Distill'd her honey on thy purple lips. Prior.

The bare majesty of a few representatives is often procured by great industry and application, wherein those who engage in the pursuits of malice are much more sedulous than such as would prevent them. Swift.

SEDULOUSLY, adv. [from sedulous.] Affiduously; industriously; laboriously; diligently; painfully.

The ritual, preceptive, prophetic, and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Gov. of the Tongue.

All things by experience
 Are most improv'd; then sedulously think
 To meliorate thy stock, no way or rule
 Be unessay'd. Philips.

SEDULOUSNESS, n. f. [from sedulous.]
 Assiduity; assiduoufness; industry; diligence.

SEE, n. f. [sedes, Lat.] The seat of episcopal power; the diocesis of a bishop.

You, my lord archbishop,
 Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd,
 Whose hand the silver band of peace hath touch'd,
 Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
 Whose white investments figure innocence,
 The dove and every blest d spirit of peace,
 Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
 Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
 Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war? Shaksp.

It is a safe opinion for their sees, empires, and kingdoms; and for themselves, if they be wise.

The pope would use these treasures, in case of any great calamity that should endanger the holy see. Bacon.

Episcopal revenues were so low reduced, that three or four sees were often united to make a tolerable competency. Swift.

To SEE, v. a. pret. I saw; part. pass. seen.
 [reon, Sax. sen, Dutch.]

1. To perceive by the eye.

Dear son Edgar,
 Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
 I'd say I had eyes again. Shaksp.

I was bowed down at the hearing of it; I was dismayed at the seeing of it. Spink.

I speak that which I have seen with my father, and ye do that which you have seen with yours. John.

He'll lead the life of gods, and he
 By gods and heroes seen, and gods will honour see.
Dryden.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes: If you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of your sight, wine is good for you; but if the pleasure of seeing be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught. Lacke.

1. See her sober over a sampler. Pope.

2. To observe; to find.

Seven other kine came up, lean starved, such as I never see for badness. Georgis.

Such command we had,
 To see that none thence afflu'd south a spy. Milton.
 Give them first one simple idea, and see that they perfectly comprehend it, before you go any farther. Lacke.

The thunderbolt we see used, by the greatest poet of Augustus's age, to express irresistible force in battle. Addison.

3. To discover; to defery.

Who is to groff
 As cannot see this palpable device? Shaksp.

Yet who so bold but says he sees it?
 When such ill dealings must be seen in thought? Shaksp.

4. To converse with.

The main of them may be reduced to language,
 and to an improvement in wisdom and penitence, by seeing men, and conversing with people of disferent tempers and customs. Lacke.

5. To attend; to remark.

I had a mind to see him out, and therefore did not care for contradicting him. Addison.

To SEE, v. n.

1. To have the power of sight; to have by the eye perception of things distant.

Who maketh the seeing or the blind? have not I,
 the Lord? Exodus.

Air hath some secret degree of light; otherwise cats and owls could not see in the night. Bacon.

2. To discern without assistance.

Many sagacious persons who see no more, will look under our noses, and see the same things, and pretensions, and discern the same things, and the world that we see in the same way, we do the contrary. Swift.

Could you see the world as I see it, you would
 There you might read your own seeing doubled. Dryden.

You may see into the spirit of them all, and form your pen from those general notions. Johnson.

3. To inquire; to distinguish.

See whether four doth make thee wrong here. Shaksp.

4. To be attentive.

Mark and perform it, see'st thou? for the fall
 Of any point in't shall be death. Shaksp.

5. To scheme; to contrive.

Cassio's a proper man: let us see now
 To get his place. Shaksp.

SEE, interjection. [originally the imperative of the verb see.] Lo; look; observe;
 behold.

See! see! upon the banks of Boyne he stands,
 By his own view adjusting his commands. H. Bun.
See! the sole bliss heav'n could on all bestow,
 Which who but feels can taste, but thinks can know. Pope.

See what it is to have a poet in your house. Pope.

SEED, n. f. [seeb, Saxon; seed, Danish; seed, Dutch.]

1. The organized particle produced by plants and animals, from which new plants and animals are generated.

If you can look into the seeds of time,
 And say which grain will grow and which will not,
 Speak then to me. Shaksp.

Seed of a year old is the best, though seeds seed and grain last better than others. Bacon.

That every plant has its seed, is an evident sign of divine providence. Morr.

Did they ever see any herbs, except those of the grass-leaved tribe, come up without two seed leaves?

which to me is an argument that they came all of feed, there being no reason else why they should produce two feed leaves different from the subsequent.

Just gods! all other things their like produce;
The vine arises from her mother's juice:
When feeble plants or tender flow'rs decay,
They to their feed their images convey.
In the south part of Staffordshire they go to the north for feed corn.

2. First principle; original.

The feed of whatsoever perfect virtue groweth from us, is a right opinion touching things divine.

3. Principle of production.

Praise of great acts he sentiers, as a feed
Which may the like in coming ages breed.

4. Progeny; offspring; descendants.

Next him king Lear in happy peace long reign'd;
But had no issue male him to succeed,
But three fair daughters which were well uptrain'd
In all that seemed fit for kingly feed.

The thing doth touch
The main of all your states, your blood, your feed.

When God gave Canaan to Abraham, he thought fit to put his feed into the grant too.

5. Race; generation; birth.

Of mortal feed they were not held,
Which other mortals to excel'd;
And beauty too in such excess,
As yours, Zelinda! claims no less.

To SEED. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To grow to perfect maturity, so as to shed the feed.

Whate'er I plant, like corn on barren earth,
By an equivocal birth,
Seeds and runs up to poetry.

2. To shed the feed.

They pick up all the old roots, except what they design for feed, which they let stand to feed the next year.

SEEDCAKE. n. f. [seed and cake.] A sweet cake interspersed with warm aromatick seeds.

Remember, wife,
The seedcake, the pasties, and furety pot.

SEEDLIP. } n. f. A vessel in which the SEEDLIP. } lower carries his feed.

SEEDPEARL. n. f. [seed and pearl.] Small grains of pearl.

In the dissolution of feedpearl in some acid menstruum, if a good quantity of the little pearls be cast in whole, they will be carried in swarms from the bottom to the top.

SEEDPLOT. n. f. [seed and plot.] The ground on which plants are sowed to be afterward transplanted.

To counsel others, a man must be furnished with an universal store in himself to the knowledge of all nature; that is, the matter and feedplot: there are the seats of all argument and invention.

Humility is a feedplot of virtue, especially christian, which thrives best when 'tis deep rooted in the humble lowly heart.

It will not be unuseful to present a full narration of this rebellion, looking back to those passages by which the feedplots were made and framed, from whence those mischiefs have successively grown.

SEEDTIME. n. f. [seed and time.] The season of sowing.

While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest shall not cease.

It he would have two tributes in one year, he must give them two seedtimes, and two harvests.

The first rain fell upon the seedtime about October, and was to make the seed to root; the latter was to fill the ear.

Seedtime and harvest, heat and hoary frost,
Shall hold their course, till fire purge all things.

Their very seedtime was their harvest, and by sowing tares they immediately reaped gold.

He that too curiously observes the face of the heavens, by mistaking his seedtime, will lose the hopes of his harvest.

SEEDLING. n. f. [from feed.] A young plant just risen from the feed.

Carry into the shade such seedlings or plants as are for their choiceness reserved in pots.

SEEDNESS. n. f. [from feed.] Seedtime;
the time of sowing.

From the seedness the bare fallow brings
To teeming loyn.

SEEDSMAN. n. f. [seed and man.]

1. The sower; he that scatters the seed.

The more it promiseth: as it ebbs, the seedsmen
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest.

2. One that sows feed.

SEEDY. adj. [from feed.] Abounding with feed.

SEE'ING. n. f. [from see.] Sight; vision.

Love adds a precious seeing to the eye.

SEE'ING. } adv. [à que, Fr. from

SEE'ING that. } see. It would be more grammatically written, as à que, pour à que, in French; seen that, or provided that. Since; sith; it being so that.

Why should not they be as well victualled for so long time, as the ships are usually for a year, seeing it is easier to keep victuals on land than water?

How shall they have any trial of his doctrine, learning, and ability to preach, seeing that he may not publicly either teach or exhort, because he is not yet called to the ministry?

Seeing every nation affords not experience and tradition enough for all kind of learning, therefore we are taught the languages of those people who have been most industrious after wisdom.

Seeing they explained the phenomena of vision, imagination, and thought, by certain thin fleeces of atoms that flow from the surfaces of bodies, and by their subtilty penetrate any obstacle, and yet retain the exact lineaments of the several bodies from which they proceed: in consequence of this hypothesis they maintained, that we could have no phantom of any thing, but what did really subsist either inture or in its several parts.

To SEEK. v. a. pret. I sought; part. pass.
sought. [seean, Sax. soeken, Dutch.]

1. To look for; to search for: often with out.

He did range the town to seek me out.

I have a venturesome fairy, that shall seek
The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee thence new nuts.

Because of the money returned in our sacks, are we brought in, that he may seek occasion against us, and take us for bondmen.

He seeketh unto him a cunning workman, to prepare a graven image.

Seek thee a man which may go with thee.

Let me once know;
I sought thee in a secret cave,

And ask'd if peace were there.

The king meant not to seek out nor to decline fighting with them, if they put themselves in his way.

So fatal 'twas to seek temptations out!
Most confidence has still most cause to doubt.

We must seek out some other original of power for the government of politics than this of Adam, or else there will be none at all in the world.

2. To solicit; to endeavour to gain.

Others tempting him, sought of him a sign.

The young lions roar after their prey, and eat their meat from God.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious care,
And not molest us, unless we ourselves
Seek them with wandering thoughts.

Of our alliance other lands desir'd,
And what we seek of you, of us requir'd.

3. To go to find.

Let us seek death, or, he not found, supply
His office.

Dardanus, though born
On Latian plains, yet sought the Phrygian shore.

Like fury seiz'd the rest; the progress known,
All seek the mountains, and forsake the town.

Since great Ulysses sought the Phrygian plain,
Within their walls inglorious silence reigns.

Indulge one labour more,
And seek Atides on the Spartan shore.

4. To pursue by machinations.

I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life.

David saw that Saul was come out to seek his life.

To SEEK. v. n.

1. To make search; to make inquiry.

Seek ye out of the book of the Lord, and read,
I have been forced to relinquish that opinion,
and have endeavoured to seek after some better reason.

2. To endeavour.

Why should he mean me ill, or seek to harm?

Ask not what pains, nor further seek to know
Their secrets, or the forms of law below.

3. To make pursuit.

Violent men have sought after my soul.

If thy brother's ox or sheep go astray, it shall be with thee until thy brother seek after it.

4. To apply to; to use solicitation.

All the earth sought to Solomon, to hear his wisdom.

Unto his habitation shall ye seek, and cluster thou shalt come.

5. To endeavour after.

Being a man of experience, he wished by wisdom to order that which the young prince sought to do war.

To SEEK. [an adverbial mode of speech.]
At a loss; without measures, knowledge, or experience.

Being brought and transferred from other scenes abroad, though they be of good experience in the yet in these they will be new to seek; and better they have gathered experience, they shall but with great loss to his majesty.

Unpractic'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek

But they misplace them all;
And are as much to seek in other things

As he that only can design a tree,
Would be to draw a shipwreck.

SEE'KER. n. f. [from seek.]

1. One that seeks; an inquirer.

Though I confess that in philosophy I am a seeker, yet cannot believe that a sceptick in philosophy must be one in divinity.

A language of a very witty volatile professors after novelty, and abounding with variety of notions.

2. The name of a sect which professed no determinate religion.

SEEKSORROW. n. f. [seek and sorrow.]
One who contrives to give himself vexation.

A field they go, where many lookers be,
And thou seeksorrow, know, them among:

Indeed thou findest it was thy friend to see,
Stephen, whose absence seem'd unto thee lone.

To SEEL. v. a. [seel, Fr.] To close the eyes. A term of falconry, in eyes of a wild or haggard hawk being for a time feeded or clofed.

Now he brought them to see a feeded dove, who in danger of danger and envy; for no man will be such parts, unless he be like the feeded dove, at mounts and mounts, because he cannot see out him. Bacon.
Since, blinded with ambition, he did four as a feeded dove, his crimes shall be his punishment.
e be depriv'd of light. Denham.

SEEL. v. n. [ryllan, Sax.] To lean on one side.
When a ship seels or rows in foul weather, the

It seems that when first I was discovered sleeping on the ground, the emperor had early notice.
Gulliver.

6. It appears to be.
Here's another discontented paper,
Found in his pocket too; and this, it seems,
Rodorigo meant t' have sent. Shakespeare.

It seems, the camel's hair is taken by painters for the skin with the hair on. Brown.

SEEMER. n. f. [from seem.] One that carries an appearance.
Angelo traces confesse
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to bread than stone: hence shall we see,
If pow'r change purpose, what our seemers be.
Shakespeare.

SEEMING. n. f. [from seem.]
1. Appearance; show; semblance.
All good seeming,
By thy revolt, oh husband, shall be thought
Pat on for villany. Shakespeare.

Give him heedful note;
And, after, we will both our judgments join
In censure of his seeming. Shakespeare.

2. Fair appearance.
For you there's rosemary and rue; these keep Seeming and favour all the winter long. Shakespeare.

3. Opinion.
Nothing more clear unto their seeming, than that, a new Jerusalem being often spoken of in scripture, they undoubtedly were themselves that new Jerusalem. Hooker.

His persuasive words impregn'd
With reason to her seeming. Milton.

SEEMINGLY. adv. [from seeming.] In appearance; in show; in semblance.
To this her mother's plot,
She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise to the doctor. Shakespeare.

They to their viands fell, not seemingly
The angels, nor in mist. Milton.

I have touched upon them, though seemingly collateral to my scope; and yet I think they are more than seemingly so, since they pertinently illustrate my design. Glanville.

The city dame was so well bred, as seemingly to take all in good part. L'Estrange.

The king and haughty empress, to our wonder,
If not aston'd, yet seemingly at peace. Dryden.

This father seemingly complied with, but afterwards refusing, the son was likewise left aside.
Addison.

They depend often on remote and seemingly disproportioned causes. Atterbury.

SEEMINGNESS. n. f. [from seeming.]
Plausibility; fair appearance.
The seemingness of those reasons persuade us on the other side. Dugby.

SEEMLINESS. n. f. [from seemly.] Decency; handsomeness; comeliness; grace; beauty.
When substantialness combineth with delightful-ness, seemliness with portliness, and currentness with stayedness, how can the language sound other than full of sweetness? Camden.

SEEMLY. adj. [from seemly, Danish; from seeme, Islandick, honour or decency.]
Decent; becoming; proper; fit.
Suspense of judgment, and exercise of charity were safer and seemly for christian men, than the hot pursuit of these controversies. Hooker.

I am a woman, lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons. Shaksp.

The wife
Safest and seemly by her husband stays. Milton.

May we enjoy
Our humid products, and with seemly draughts
Easie mirth and hospitable love. Philips.

We are in hopes that you may prove a dreamer of dreams, and a seer of visions. Spectator.

2. A prophet; one who foresees future events.
How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest!
Measur'd this transient world the race of time.
Till time stand fix'd. Milton.

By day your lighted seers
Shall call for mountains to express their tears.
And with their eyes were floods: by night from deeps. Prior.

Of opening gulphs, black storms, and raging flames,
Starting amaz'd, shall to the people show Emblems of heavenly wrath, and mynion types of woe. Prior.

SEERWOOD. n. f. See SEARWOOD. Dry wood.
Caught, like dry bubble fr'd, or like seerwood;
Yet from the wound ebb'd no purple flood,
But look'd a bubbling mass of frying blood. Dryden.

SEESAW. n. f. [from saw.] A reciprocating motion.
His wit all seesaw, between that and this;
Now high, now low, now master up, now mistress,
And he himself one vile antithesis. Pope.

TO SEESAW. v. n. [from saw.] To move with a reciprocating motion.
Sometimes they were like to pull John over, then it went all of a sudden again on John's side; so they went seesawing up and down, from one end of the room to the other. Aylmer.

TO SEETH. v. a. preterit I sod or seethed;
part. pass. sodden. [reuban, Sax. sodden,

And so 'scape hanging. Shakespeare.

Set on the great pot, and seeth postage for the sons of the prophets. 2 Kings.

TO SEETH. v. n. To be in a state of ebullition; to be hot.
The boiling baths at Canbaddon,
Which seeth with secret fire eternally,
And in their entrails, full of quick brimston,
Nourish the flames which they are warm'd upon. Fairy Queen.

I will make a complimentary assault upon him;
for my business seeth. Shakespeare.

Lovers and madmen have such seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shakespeare.

The priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh hook, and stuck it into the p.m. 1 Samuel.

SEETHER. n. f. [from seeth.] A boiler;
a pot.
The fire thus form'd, she sets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little seethers flame. Dryden.

SEGMENT. n. f. [from segmentum, Latin.] A figure contained between a chord and an arch of the circle, or so much of the circle as is cut off by that chord.
Unto a parallel sphere, and such as live under the poles, for half a year, the segments may appear at any time, and under any quarter, the sun not setting, but walking round. Brown.

Their segments of arcs, which appeared so numerous, for the most part exceeded not the third part of a circle. Newton.

SEGNIETY. n. f. [from segnis, Lat.] Slug-

4. Compounded with him, a pronoun substantive, self is in appearance an adjective: joined to my, thy, our, your, his, her, its.

pronoun adjectives, it seems a substantive. Even when compounded with him it is at last found to be a substantive, by its variation in the plural, contrary to the nature of English adjectives, as himself, themselves.

No more he mention'd then of violence Against ourselves, or wilful barrenness. Milton.
Myself, himself, themselves, and the rest,
may, contrary to the analogy of my, him,
them, be used as nominatives.

It often adds only emphasis and force to the pronoun with which it is compounded: as, he did it himself.

A horse well bitten, which himself did dress.
Dryden
And touch'd with miseries myself have known,
Learn to pity woes so like my own. Dryden.

It signifies the individual, as subject to his own contemplation or action.

The spark of noble courage now awake,
And drive your excellent self to excel. F. Queen.

Next to the knowledge of God, his knowledge of ourselves is most worthy of our endeavor. Hule.

Since consciousness always accompanies thinking, and it is that that makes every one to be what he calls self, and thereby distinguishes himself from all other thinking things; in this alone consists personal identity, i. e. the sameness of a rational being. Locke.

It is by the consciousness it has of its present thoughts and actions, that it is self to it self now, and so will be the same self, as far as the same consciousness can extend to actions past or to come. Locke.

The fondness we have for self, and the relation which other things have to our *self*es, furnishes another long rank of prejudices. Hales.

It is much used in composition, which it is proper to explain by a train of examples. It is to be observed, that its composition in Shakespeare is often harsh.

Then held the her tongue, and cast down a self- easing look, finding that self felt the had it out of the bow of her affection a more quick opening of her mind than the minded to have done. Sidney.

Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy mist
Of our self-love, to passions do deceive.

We know thy hurt when most thy do assist. Sidney.

Till Strephon's planning voice him nearer drew,
Where by his words his self-like care he knew. Sidney.

Ah! where was first that cruel cunning found,
To frame of earth a vessel of the mind,
Where it could be to self-destruction bound? Sidney.

Before the door sat self continuing care,
Day and night keeping wary watch and ward. Fairy Queen.

My strange and self abuse
Is the more fear that that wants hard use. Shaksp.

I have heard so much,
And with Demetrius thou, but I have spoke thereof,
That being over-full of self affairs,
My mind did lose it. Shaksp.

Not know I taught
By me that's said or done amiss this night,
That's self-charity be sometimes a vice,
And to defend ourselves it be a sin,
When violence affords us. Shaksp.

He walks, and that self cham about his neck,
Which he forswore. Shaksp.

It is in my power, in one self-born hour,
To plant and overwhelm custom. Shaksp.

His treasons will fit blushing in his face,
Not able to endure the sight of day,
But self affrighted tremble at his sin. Shaksp.

The stars above us govern our conditions;
Is one self-mate and mate could not beget
Such different issues. Shaksp.

I'm made of that self-metal as my sister,
And prize me at her worth. Shaksp.

I my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
To the self-same way, with more advised watch,
To bid the other forth. Shaksp.

He may do some good on her:
A Jewish self-will'd harlotry it is. Shaksp.

But let myself be guilty of self-wrong,
I'll stop mine ears against the metemorphosis. Shaksp.

He conjunct, and flatter'd his displeasure,
Tript me behind: being down, insulted, rail'd,
Got praises of the king.

For him attempting who was self-subdu'd. Shaksp.

The Everlasting fix
His cannon 'gainst self slaughter. Shaksp.

Know of his last purpose hold,
Or whether since he is advis'd by ought To change the course. He's full of alteration
And self reproving. Shaksp.

More nor let's to others paying,
Than by self-offences weighing;
Shame to him whole cruel striking Kills for faults of his own liking. Shaksp.

Pellom's bridegroom, kept in proof,
Confronted him with self-captivity,
Point against point. Shaksp.

Self-love, my hege, is not to vile a sin
As self-neglecting. Shaksp.

Anger is like
A full hot horse, who, being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Shaksp.

His loads desire him to have borne
His bruised helmet and his bearded sword
Before him through the city; he forbids it,
Being free from vammels and self-glorious pride. Shaksp.

You promis'd
To lay aside self-harming heaviness,
And entertain a cheerful disposition. Shaksp.

In their anger they drew a man, and in their self- will they digged down a wall. Genes.

The most ordinary cause of a single life is liberty, especially in certain self-pleasing and humorous minds, which are so sensible of every restraint as to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Bacon.

Hath though set up nothing in competition with God; no pride, profit, self-love, or self-interest of thy own? Dapp.

Up through the spacious palace pass'd the
To where the king's proudly reposed head,
It any can be lost to tyranny,
And self-tormenting sin, had a lost bed. Crashw.

With a joyful willingness these self loving to formers took possession of all vacant pretectment, and with reluctance others parted with their loved colleges and subsistence. Walton.

Repent the sin; but if the punishment
Thou canst avoid, self-pleasing bids. Milton.

Him fast sleeping soon he found,
In labyrinth of many a round self roll'd. Milton.

Oh times nothing profits more Than self-effacement, grounded on just and right, Well manag'd. Milton.

Self-knowing, and from thence Magnanimous, to correspond with heav'n. Milton.

So virtue giv'n for lost,
Deprest and overthrown, as seem'd,
Like that self begotten bird,
In th' Arabian woods embold,
That no second knows nor third,
And lay here while a holocaust,
From out her ally womb now teem'd. Milton.

He furrows now, repents, and prays contrite,
My motions in him longer than thy move,
His heart I know how variable and vain,
Self-left. Milton.

Seneca approves this self-homicide Thyself from flatter'd self conceit defend,
Nor what thou dost not know, to know pretend. D. Ham.

Man's that savage bent, whose mind,
From reason to self-love declin'd,
Delights to prey upon his kind. Denham.

Farewell, my tears;
And, my just anger, be no more confin'd
To vain complaints, or self devouring silence. Denh.

They are yet more mad to think that men may rest by death, though they die in self murder, the greatest sin. Gray.

Are not these strange self-deceptions, and yet attended by common experience? South.

If the image of God is only sovereignty, certainly we have been hitherto much mistaken, and hereafter are to beware of making ourselves unlike God, by too much self-denial and humility. South.

If a man would have a fervent, humble, steady-horrid, self-denying frame of spirit, he cannot take a more efficacious course to obtain it than by praying himself into it. South.

Let a man apply himself to the difficult work of self-examination, by a strict scrutiny into the whole estate of his soul. South.

A fatal self imposture, such as defeats the desire, and destroys the force, of all relation. South.

When he attempts to be a creature of an illu-sionary person, he may cast him upon a bold self- opinioned physician, who shall make a flint to cure him into his grave. South.

Neglect of ourselves can never be proved rational, till we prove the person using it omnipotent and self sufficient, and such as can never need any mortal assistance. South.

By all human laws, as well as divine, self-mar-der has ever been agreed on as the greatest crime. Temple.

A self-connected top will swallow any thing
L'Estrange.

From Athens though your word at language came;
Yet my self contents words you in unknown,
Your virtue through the world, his nations blown. Dryden.

He has given you all the consolation which a his self humanity could afford to any. Dryden.

Below you sphere
There hangs the ball of earth and water mixt,
Self-center'd and unmov'd. Dryden.

All these receive their birth from other things,
But from himself the phoenix only springs;
Self-born, begotten by the parent flame
In which he burn'd, another and the same. Dryden.

The burning one, that thine to bright,
Flaw out all sudden with extinguish'd light,
And left one altar dark, a little space,
Which turn'd self knotted, and renew'd the blaze. Dryden.

Thou fish, O king! rebuke the rights of sway;
Power's self command the people best obey. Dryden.

Ignaten and numbers are equal to three; even by the same self evidence that one and two are equal to three. Locke.

A contradiction of what has been said, is a mark of yet a deeper and self-conceit in duets, when we take upon us to set another right in history. Locke.

I am as justly accountable for any action done many years since, appropriated to me now by this self-continuity, as I am for what I did the last moment. Locke.

Each intermediate idea agreeing on each side with those two, it is immediately placed between the ideas of one and self-determination appear to be connected. Locke.

These self existent being hath the power of perfection, as well as of existence, in himself; for he that is above, or exists without, any cause, that is, hath the power of existence in himself, cannot be without the power of any possible existence. Grew.

Body cannot be self existent, because it is not self-moving; for motion is out of the influence of body, because we may have a de-clarative conception of body, abstracted from that of motion; wherefore motion is something else besides body, something without which body may be conceived to exist. Grew.

Confidence, as opposed to modesty, and distinguished from decent assurance, proceeds from self- opinion, or founded by ignorance or flattery. Collier.

Bewilder'd, I my author cannot find,
I'll some first cause, some self-existent mind,
Who form'd and rules all nature, is a god. Hud.

If a first body may to any place
Be not determin'd in the boundless space,
'Tis plain it then may absent be from all,
Who then will this a self existence call? Blackmore.

Shall nature, crying from her first command,
Self-preservation, fall by her own hand? Granville.

I own nonsense is the talent of a cold phlegmatick temper; a writer of this complexion groves his way softly amongst self-contradiction, and groves in absurdity. Addison.

This fatal hypocrisy and self-deceit is taken notice of in these words, Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults. Spect.

The guilt of perjury is to self-evident, that it was always reckoned amongst the greatest crimes, by those who were only governed by the light of reason.

Addison. Self-sufficiency proceeds from inexperience.

Men had better own their ignorance, than advance doctrines which are self-contradictory. Speil.

Light, which of all bodies is nearest allied to spirit, is also most diffusive and self-communicative.

Thus we see, in bodies, the more of him they are to spirit in sublimity and refinement, the more spreading are they and self-diffusive. Norris.

God, who is an absolute spiritual act, and who is such a pure light as in which there is no darkness, must needs be infinitely self-impacting and communicative. Norris.

Every animal is conscious of some individual, self-moving, self-determining principle.

Nick does not pretend to be a gentleman: he is a tradesman, a self-seeking wretch. Arbutnot.

By the blit of self-opinion mov'd,
We will to charm, and seek to be belov'd. Prior.

Living and understanding subtilties do clearly demonstrate to philosophical inquirers the necessary self-existence, power, wisdom, and beneficence of their Maker. Bentley.

If it can intrinsically stir itself, and either commence or alter its course, it must have a principle of self-activity, which is life and sense. Bentley.

This desire of existence is a natural affection of the soul; 'tis self-preservation in the highest and truest meaning. Bentley.

The philosophers, and even the epicureans, maintained the self-sufficiency of the godhead, and seldom or never sacrificed at all. Bentley.

Matter is not endued with self-motion, nor with a power to alter the course in which it is put: it is merely passive, and must ever continue in that state it is settled in. Cheque.

I took not arms, till urg'd by self-defence,
The eldest law of nature. Rowe.

His labour and study would have shewn his early mistakes, and cured him of self-flattering delusions. Watts.

sic, one of the degrees of consecutive intervals of concords. Bailey

SEMI-VOWEL. n. f. [semi and vowel.] A consonant which makes an imperfect sound, or does not demand a total occlusion of the mouth.

When Homer would represent any agreeable object, he makes use of the smoothest vowels and most flowing semitouch. Bacon

SEMI-VERVE. n. f. [semper and verax,
Lat. that is, always alive.] A plant.

The greater semper-verax will put out branches two or three years, but they wrap the root in an old cloth once in half a year. Bacon

SEMI-ETERNAL. adj. [sempereternel, Fr.
sempereternus, from semper and eternus,
Latin.]

1. Eternal in futurity; having beginning, but no end.

Those, though they suppose the world not to be eternal, à parte ante, are not contented to suppose it to be sempiternal, or eternal à parte post; but will carry up the creation of the world to an immense antiquity. Hale.

SEN. In poetry it is used simply for eternal. Should we the long-depending scale ascend Of fons and futhers will it never end? If 'twill, then must we through the order run To some one man whose being ne'er begun; If that one man was sempiternal, why Did he, since independent, ever die? Blackmore.

SEMPITERNITY. n. f. [sempiternitas, Lat.] Future duration without end.

The future eternity or sempiternity of the world being admitted, though the eternity à parte ante be denied, there will be a future infinity for the emanation of the divine goodness. Hale.

SEMPITRENA. n. f. [sempiterna, Sax.] A woman whose business is to sew; a woman who lives by her needle.

Two hundred sempitrenes were employed to make me shirts, and linen for bed and table, which they were forced to quilt together in several folds.

The tuck'd-up sempitrens walks with hasty strides. Gulliver.

SENIARY. adj. [senarius, seni, Lat.] Belonging to the number six; containing six.

SENATE. n. f. [senatus, Lat. senat, Fr.] An assembly of counsellors; a body of men set apart to consult for the publick good.

We debate The nature of our seats, which will in time break open The locks o' th' senate, and bring in the crows To peck the eagles. Shakespeare.

There they shall found Their government, and their great senate chuse. Milton.

He had not us'd excursions, spears, or darts, But counsel, order, and such good arts; Which if our ancestors had not retain'd, The senate's name our counsel had not gain'd. Denham.

Gallus was welcom'd to the sacred strand, The senate rising to salute their guest. Dryden.

SENATEHOUSE. n. f. [senate and house.] Place of publick council.

The nobles in great earnestness are going All to the senatehouse; some news is come. Shakespeare.

SENATOR. n. f. [senator, Lat. senator, Fr.] A publick counsellor.

Most unwise patricians, You grave but reckless senators, Shakespeare. As if to ev'ry top it might belong, Like senators, to censure, right or wrong. Granville.

SENATORIAL. } adj. [senatorius, Latin; SENATORIAN. } senatorial, senatorien, Fr.] Belonging to senators; befitting senators.

TO SEND. v. a. pret. and part. pass. sent. [sandgan, Gothick; sendan, Saxon; senden, Dutch.]

1. To despatch from one place to another: used both of persons and things. He sent letters by posts on horseback. Effler. His citizens sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us. Luke. There have been commotions Sent down among them, which have flaw'd the heart Of all their loyalties. Shakespeare. My overshadowing spirit and might with thee I send along. Milton.

To remove him I decree, And send him from the garden forth to till The ground whence he was taken, sinner foil. Milton.

His wounded men he first sends off to shore.

Servants, sent on messages, stay not somewhat longer than the message requires. Swift.

2. To commission by authority to go and act. I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran. Jeremiah.

But first, whom shall we send In search of this new world? Here he had need All circumspection, and we now no less Choice in our suffrage; for on whom we send The weight of all and our last hope relies. Milton.

3. To transmit by another; not to bring. They sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas. Acts.

4. To dismiss another as agent; not to go. God will despatch. Jeremiah.

To visit oft the dwellings of just men Delighted, and with frequent intercourse, Thither will send his winged messengers On errands of funeral grace. Milton.

5. To grant as from a distant place; as, if God send life.

I pray thee send me good speed this day, and show kindness unto my master. Genesis. O send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me. Psalms.

6. To inflict, as from a distance. The Lord shall send upon thee cursing, vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou settest thine hand unto. Deuteronomy.

7. To emit; to innuit; to produce. The water sends forth plants that have no roots fixed in the bottom, being almost but leaves. Bacon.

The senses send in only the influxes of material things, and the imagination and memory present only their pictures or images, when the objects themselves are absent. Chryse.

8. To diffuse; to propagate. Charming songs by night from neighb'ring hills Aërial music send. Milton.

When the fury took her stand on high, A hiss from all the snakey tire went round: The dreadful signal all the rocks rebound, And through th' Achaian cities send the sound. Pope.

9. To let fly; to cast or shoot. To SEND. v. n.

1. To despatch a message. I have made bold to send in to your wife: My suit is that she will to Deidamia Procure me some accels. Shakespeare.

This son of a murderer hath sent to take away my head. Kings. They could not attempt their perfect reformation in church and state, till those votes were utterly abolished; therefore they sent the same day again to the king. Clarendon.

2. To send for. To require by message to come, or cause to be brought.

Go with me, some few of you, and see the place, and then you may send for your sick, which bring on land. Bacon. He sent for me; and, while I rais'd his head, He threw his aged arms about my neck, And, seeming that I wept, he press'd me close. Dryden.

SENDER. n. f. [from send.] He that sends.

This was a merry message. —We hope to make the sender blush at it. Shakespeare.

Love that comes too late, Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried, To the great sender turns a sour offence. Shakespeare.

Best with the best, the sender, not the sent. Milton.

SENESCENCE. n. f. [senescio, Lat.] The state of growing old; decay by time.

The earth and all things will continue in the state wherein they now are, without the least senescence or decay; without jarring, disorder, or invasion of one another. Woodward.

SENESCENCE. n. f. [senescit, Fr. et certain original.]

1. One who had in great houses the care of feasts or domestick ceremonies. John earl of Huntingdon, under his seal of arms, made Sir John Arundel, of Trenc, seneschal of his household, as well in peace as in war. Cerce.

Marshall'd tent, Serv'd up in hall with sewers and seneschals, The skill of artifice, or office, mean! Milton. The seneschal rebuk'd in haste withdrew; With equal haste a mental train pursues. Pope.

2. It afterward came to signify other offices.

SENGREEN. n. f. [segreen, Fr.] A plant.

SENILE. adj. [senilis, Lat.] Belonging to old age; consequent on old age.

My green youth made me very unripe for a task of that nature, whose difficulty requires that it should be handled by a person in whom nature, education, and time, have happily matched a senile maturity of judgment with youthful vigour of fancy. Boyle.

SENIOR. n. f. [senior, Lat.]

1. One older than another; one who, on account of longer time, has some superiority. How can you admit your seniors to the examination or allowing of them, not only being inferior in office and calling, but in gifts also? Whig.

2. An aged person. A senior of the place replies, Well read, and curious of antiquities. Dryden.

SENIORITY. n. f. [from senior.] Eldership; priority of birth. As in inturrections the younger is looked on with a peculiar severity, so, in this case, the first provoker has, by his seniority and primogeniture, a double portion of the guilt. Goreau.

He was the elder brother, and Ulysses might be assigned to his care by the right due to his seniority. Brown.

SENNA. n. f. [sena, Lat.] A physical tree.

What rhubarb, senna, or what purgative drug, Would scour these English hence? Shakespeare. Senna tree is of two sorts; the bastard senna, and the scorpion senna; both which yield a pleasant leaf and flower. Mortimer.

SENNIGHT. n. f. [contracted from senennight.] The space of seven nights and days; a week. See FORTNIGHT.

If mention is made, on Monday, of Thursday senennight, the Thursday that follows the next Thursday, is meant.

Time trots hard with a young maid between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a senennight, time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven years. Shakespeare.

SENOULAR. adj. [seni and oculus, Lat.]

Having six eyes. Most animals are binocular, spiders octocular, and some senocular. DeKam.

SENSATION. n. f. [sensation, Fr. sensatio, school Lat.] Perception by means of the senses.

Diversity of constitution, or other circumstances vary the sensations; and to them of Java pepper cold. Goussier.

The brain, distempered by a cold, beating against the root of the auditory nerve, and protruded into the tympanum, causes the sensation of noise. Hall.

This great source of most of the ideas we have depending wholly upon our senses, and derived from them to the understanding, I call sensation. Locke. When we are asleep, joy and sorrow give us more vigorous sensations of pain or pleasure than at any other time. Adams.

The happiest, upon a fair climate, have fewer sensations of pain than pleasure. Rogers.

SENSE. n. f. [sens, Fr. sensus, Lat.]

1. Faculty or power by which external ob-sense are perceived: the sight, touch, hearing, smell, taste.

This pow'r is sense, which from abroad doth bring.

The colour, taste, and touch, and smell, and sound,
The quantity and shape of every thing
Within earth's centre or heav'n's circle found:
And though things sensible be numberless,
But only five the sense's organs be;
And in those five all things their forms express,
Which we can touch, taste, feel, or hear, or see.

Davies.

Then is the soul a nature, which contains
The pow'r sense within a greater pow'r,
Which doth sense and use the sense's pains;
But fits and takes within her private bow'r.

Both contain

Within them every lower faculty
Of sense, whereby they hear, see, smell, touch, Taste.

Milton.

Of the five senses, two are usually and most properly called the senses of learning, as being most capable of receiving communication of thought and notions by selected signs; and these are hearing and seeing.

Holder.

2. Perception by the senses; sensation.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the effects of any one part of the body minutely make a transference throughout the whole.

Bacon.

If we had nought but sense, then only they Should have found minds which have their senses found;

But wisdom grows when senses do decay,
And lolly morn in quickest sense is found.
Such is the mighty swiftness of your mind,
That, like the earth's, it leaves the sense behind.

Dryden.

3. Perception of intellect; apprehension of mind.

This Stasius, having the quick sense of a lover, took as though his mistress had given him a secret reprehension.

Sidney.

God, to remove his ways from human sense,
Plac'd heav'n from earth so far.

Milton.

4. Sensibility; quickness or keenness of perception.

He should have liv'd,
Saw that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,
Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge.

Shakespeare.

5. Understanding; soundness of faculties; strength of natural reason.

Opprest nature sleeps:
This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses.

Shakespeare.

God hath endued mankind with powers and abilities which we call natural light and reason, and common sense.

Bentley.

There's something previous ev'n to taste; 'tis God's gift,
which only is the gift of heaven,
And, though no science, fairly worth the seven:

Aught within yourself you must perceive;
Jones and Le Noire have it not to give.

Pope.

6. Reason; reasonable meaning.

He raves; his words are loose
As heaves of sand, and scattering wide from sense:
You see he knows not me, his natural father;
That now the wind is got into his head,
And turns his brains to frenzy.

Dryden.

7. Opinion; notion; judgment.

I speak my private but impartial sense
With freedom, and, I hope, without offence.

Rowe.

8. Conscientiousness; conviction.

In the due sense of my want of learning, I only take a conviction of my own fault.

Dryden.

9. Moral perception.

Some are so hardened in wickedness, as to have no sense of the most friendly offices.

L'Estrange.

10. Meaning; import.

In this sense, to be preserved from sin is not impossible.

Hooker.

My hearty friends,
You take me in too choleric a sense.
A low, silly presumption, that because we are encouraged to believe that in some sense all things are made for man, that therefore they are not made at all for themselves.

More.

All before Richard 1. is before time of memory;
and what is since, is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory.

Hale.

In one sense it is, indeed, a building of gold and silver upon the foundation of Christianity.

Tillotson.

When a word has been used in two or three senses, and has made a great road for error, drop one or two of those senses, and leave it only one remaining, and add the other senses or ideas to other words.

Watts.

SENSED. part. [from sense.] Perceived by the senses. Not in use.

Let the foolist tell me, why things must needs be so as his individual senses represent them: is he sure that objects are not otherwise sensed by others, than they are by him? And why must his sense be the infallible criterion? It may be, what is white to us, is black to negroes.

Glanville.

SENSEFUL. adj. [from sense and full.] Reasonable; judicious. Not used.

Men, otherwise senseful and ingenious, quote such things out of an author as would never pass in conversation.

Norris.

SENSELESS. adj. [from sense.] Wanting sense; wanting life; void of all life or perception.

The charm and venom which they drunk
Their blood with secret filth infected both,
Being diffused through the senseless trunk,
That through the great contagion darted deadly stunk.

Laurel.

The ears are senseless that should give us hearing,
To tell him his commandment is fulfilled.
You blocks! you worse than senseless things!

Shakespeare.

It is as repugnant to the idea of senseless matter, that it should put into itself taste, perception, and knowledge, as it is repugnant to the idea of a triangle, that it should put into itself greater angles than two right ones.

Locke.

2. Unfeeling; wanting sympathy.

The senseless grave feels not your pious sorrows

Rowe.

3. Unreasonable; stupid; doltish; blockish.

They would repent this their senseless perverseness when it would be too late, and when they found themselves under a power that would destroy them.
If we be not extremely foolish, thankless, or senseless, a great joy is more apt to come tomorrow than a great trouble is.

Trotter.

The great design of this author's book is to prove this, which I believe no man in the world is ever to senseless us to deny.

Tillotson.

She saw her favour was misplaced;
The fellows had a wretched tale.

She needs must tell them to her face,
They were a senseless stupid race.

Swift.

4. Contrary to true judgment; contrary to reason.

It is a senseless thing, in reason, to think that one of these interests can stand without the other, when, in the very order of natural causes, government is preserved by religion.

South.

Old creatures, as well as monkeys, little water than they do dry their young by senseless fondness, and too much embracing.

Locke.

5. Wanting sensibility; wanting quickness or keenness of perception. Not in use.

To draw Mais like a young Hippolytus, with an effeminate countenance, or that hot-spurred Harpallee in Virgil, proceedeth from a senseless and over-cold judgment.

Frucham.

6. Wanting knowledge; unconscious; with of.

The wretch is drench'd too deep;
His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep,
Fatten'd in vice; so callous and so gross,
He sins and sees not, senseless of his loss.

Dryden.

He is un-
household, lawless, rambling libertines, Senseless of any charm in love, beyond
The prostitution of a common bed.

Southern.

SENSELESSLY. adv. [from senseless.] In a senseless manner; stupidly; unreasonably.

If any one should be found so senselessly arrogant as to suppose man alone knowing and wise, but yet the product of mere ignorance and chance, and that all the rest of the universe acted only by that blind hap-hazard, I shall leave with him that very rational and emphatical rebuke of Tully.

Locke.

SENSELESSNESS. n. f. [from senseless.]

Folly; unreasonableness; absurdity;
stupidity.

The senselessness of the tradition of the crocodile's moving his upper jaw, is plain, from the articulation of the occiput with the neck, and the neither jaw with the upper.

Cruik.

SENSIBILITY. n. f. [from sensible, French.]

1. Quickness of sensation.

2. Quickness of perception; delicacy.

Modesty is a kind of quick and delicate feeling in the soul; it is such an exquisite sensibility, as warns a woman to shun the first appearance of every thing hostile.

Addison.

SENSIBLE. adj. [from sensible, Fr. sensibilis, Lat.]

1. Having the power of perceiving by the senses.

Would your cambric were as sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity.

Shakespeare.

These be those discourses of God, whose effects, those that live within in themselves; the sensible in their sensible natures, the reasonable in their reasonable souls.

Raleigh.

A blind man conceives not colours, but under the notion of some other sensible faculty.

Glanville.

2. Perceptible by the senses.

By reason man attaineth unto the knowledge of things that are and are not sensible: it is such, therefore, that we search how man attaineth unto the knowledge of such things unperceptible as are to be known.

Hooker.

Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle to my hand? Come, let me clutch thee:

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still:

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible

To feeling as to sight?

Shakespeare.

The space left and acquired in every sensible moment in such slow progressions, is so inconsiderable, that it cannot possibly move the sense.

Glanville.

It is manifest that the heavens are void of all sensible resistance, and by consequence of all sensible matter.

Newton.

The greater part of men are no otherwise moved than by sense, and have neither leisure nor ability to improve their power of reflection, as to be capable of conceiving the divine perfections, without the assistance of sensible objects.

Hopkins.

As is sensible to the touch by its motion, and by its resistance to bodies moved in it.

Arbutnot.

3. Perceived by the mind.

Idleness was punished by too many stripes in publick, and the disgrace was more sensible than the pain.

Temple.

4. Perceiving by either mind or senses; having perception by the mind or senses.

This must needs remove

The sensible of pain.

Milton.

I saw you in the east at your first arising I was as soon sensible as any of that light, when just shooting out, and beginning to travel upwards to the meridian.

Dryden.

I do not say there is no soul in man, because he is not sensible of it in his sleep; but I do say, he cannot think at any time, waking or sleeping, without being sensible of it.

Locke.

The verification was beautiful as the description complete, every ear must be sensible of it.

Brown.

5. Having moral perception; having the quality of being affected by moral good or ill.

It thou wert sensible of courtesy,

I should not make to great a use of zeal.

Shakespeare.

6. Having quick intellectual feeling; being easily or strongly affected.

Even I, the bold, the insensible of wrong,
Beside me'd by shame, wash'd to hold my tongue.
Dryden.

7. Convinced; persuaded. A low life.

They are very insensible that they had better have pushed their conquests on the other side of the Adriatic; for then their territories would have lain together. Addison.

8. In low conversation it has sometimes the sense of reasonableness; judicious; wise.

I have been tired with accounts from insensible men, furnished with matters of fact, which have happened within their own knowledge. Addison.

SENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from sensible.]

1. Possibility to be perceived by the senses.

2. Actual perception by mind or body.

3. Quickness of perception; sensibility.

The insensibility of the eye renders it subject to pain, as also unfit to be dressed with sharp medica-ments. Sharp.

4. Painful consciousness.

There is no condition of soul more wretched than that of the senseless obdurate sinner, being a kind of numbness of soul; and, contrariwise, this feeling and insensibility, and sorrow for sin, the most vital quality. Hammond.

5. Judgment; reasonableness. An use not admitted but in conversation.

SENSIBLY. adv. [from sensible.]

1. Perceptibly to the senses.

He is your brother, lords; insensibly fed
Of that self-blood that first gave life to you Shakspeare.
A sudden pain in my right foot increased insensibly.
Temple.

The salts of human urine may, by the violent motion of the blood, be turned alkaline, and even corrosive; and to they affect the fibres of the brain more insensibly than other parts. Arbuthnot.

2. With perception of either mind or body.

3. Externally; by impression on the senses.

That church of Christ, which we properly term his body mystical, can be but one; neither can that one be insensibly discerned by any, inasmuch as the parts thereof are some in heaven already with Christ. Hooker.

4. With quick intellectual perception.

5. [In low language.] Judiciously; reasonably.

SENSITIVE. adj. [from sensitivus, Fr.] Having sense or perception, but not reason.

The sensitive faculty may have a sensitive love of some sensitive objects, which though moderated to as not to fall into sin, yet, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards that inferior object than towards God; this is a piece of human frailty. Hammond.

All the actions of the sensitive appetite are in printing called passions, because the soul is excited by them, and because the body suffers and is sensitively altered. Dryden.

Bodies are such as are endowed with a vegetative soul, as plants; a sensitive soul, as animals; or a rational soul, as the body of man. Ray.

SENSITIVE Plant. n. f. [mirabilis, Lat.] A plant.

The flower consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a funnel, having in many stamens in the centre these flowers are collected into a round head: from the bottom of the flower rises the pistil, which afterwards becomes an oblong flat jointed pod, which opens both ways, and contains in each partition one roundish seed. Of this plant the humble plants are a species, which are so called, because, upon being touched, the pedicle of their leaves falls downward; but the leaves of the sensitive plant are only contracted. Müller.

Vegetables have many of them some degrees of motion, and, upon the different application of other bodies to them, do very briskly alter their figure and motion, and so have obtained the name of sensitive plants, from a motion which has some resemblance to that which in animals follows upon sensation. Locke.

Whence does it happen that the plant, which well
We name the sensitive, should move and feel?
Whence know her leaves to answer her command,
And with quick horror fly the neighbouring hand?
Prior.

The sensitive plant is so called, because, as soon as you touch it, the leaf shrinks. Mortimer.

SENSITIVELY. adv. [from sensitive.] In a sensitive manner.

The sensitive faculty, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards an inferior object than towards God: this is a piece of frailty. Hammond.

SENSORIUM. } n. f. [Latin.]

SENSORY.

1. The part where the senses transmit their perceptions to the mind; the seat of sense.

Spiritual species, both visible and audible, will work upon the sensories, though they move not any other body. Bacon.

As found in a bell, or musical string, or other sounding body, is nothing but a trembling motion, and the air nothing but that motion propagated from the object, in the sensory 'tis a sense of that motion under the form of sound. Newton.

Is not the sensory of animals the place to which the sensitive substance is present, and into which the sensible species of things are carried through the nerves of the brain, that there they may be perceived by their immediate presence to that substance? Newton.

2. Organ of sensation.

That we all have double sensories, two eyes, two ears, is an effectual confutation of this atheistical sophism. Bentley.

SENSUAL. adj. [from sensualis, French.]

1. Consisting in sense; depending on sense; affecting the senses.

Men in general are too partial in favour of a sensual appetite, to take notice of truth when they have found it. L'Estrange.

Far as creation's ample range extends,
The scale of sensual, mental powers ascends. Pope.

2. Pleasing to the senses; carnal; not spiritual.

The greatest part of men are such as prefer their own private good before all things, even that good which is sensual before whatsoever is most divine. Hooker.

3. Devoted to sense; lewd; luxurious.

From amidst them rose
Behal, the dissolute spirit that fell;
The sensualist, and after Almoda
The flaccid, incubus. Milton.

No small part of virtue consists in abstaining from that wherein sensual men place their felicity.
Atterbury.

SENSUALIST. n. f. [from sensual.] A carnal person; one devoted to corporal pleasures.

Let atheists and sensualists satisfy themselves as they are able, the former of which will find, that, as long as reason keeps her ground, religion neither can nor will lose hers. South.

SENSUALITY. n. f. [from sensual.] Devotedness to the senses; addiction to brutal and corporal pleasures.

But you are more intemperate in your blood
Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals
That rage in savage sensuality. Shakspeare.

Kill not her quick'ning power with surfeitings;
Nor not her fickle with sensuality.

Cut not her serious wit on idle things;
Make not her free-will slave to vanity. Davies.

Sensuality is one kind of pleasure, such an one as it is. South.

They avoid dress, lest they should have affections tainted by any sensuality, and diverted from the love of him who is to be the only comfort and delight of their whole beings. Addison.

Impure and brutal sensuality was too much confirmed by the religion of those countries, where even Venus and Bacchus had their temples. Bentley.

TO SENSUALIZE. v. a. [from sensual.]

To sink to sensual pleasures; to degrade the mind into subjection to the senses.
Not to suffer one's self to be sensualized by passions, like those who were changed into brutes by Circé. Pope.

SENSUALLY. adv. [from sensual.] In a sensual manner.

SENSUOUS. adj. [from sensu.] Tender;
pathetic; full of passion. Not in use.

To this poetry would be made precedent, as being less sublime and fine; but more humble, insensitive, and passionate. Milton.

SENT. The participle passive of send.

I make a decree that all tread go with thee, for as much as thou art sent of the king. Isa.

SENTENCE. n. f. [sententia, Fr. sententia,
Latin.]

1. Determination or decision, as of a judge; civil or criminal.

The rule of voluntary agents on earth is the sentence that reason giveth, concerning the goods of those things which they are to do. Plot.

If we have neither voice from heaven, that is pronounced of them, neither sentence of men grounded upon such manifest and clear proofs, yet they, in whole hands it is to alter them, may like wise infallibly, even in heart and conscience, judge them so; upon necessity to urge alteration, is to trouble and disturb without necessity. Hooker.

How will I give sentence against them. Jerome.
It matter of fact breaks out with too great evidence to be denied, why, full there are of lenitives, that friendship will apply, before it will be brought to the decretory rigours of a condemning sentence. South.

Let him set out some of Luther's works, that by them we may pass sentence upon his doctrines. Atterbury.

2. It is usually spoken of condemnation pronounced by the judge; doom.

By the content of all laws, in capital crimes, evidence must be full and clear; and if to, where one man's life is in question, what say we to war, which is ever the sentence of death upon many? Bacon.

What rests but that the mortal sentence pass?
Milton.

3. A maxim; an axiom, generally moral.

A sentence may be defined a moral instruction couched in a few words. Bacon.

4. A short paragraph; a period in writing.

An excellent spirit, knowledge, and eloquence,
and shewing of hard sentences were found in David.
Daniel.

TO SENTENCE. v. a. [sententiar, Fr. in
the noun.]

1. To pass the last judgment on any one.

After this cold confidence, sentence me,
And, as you are a king, speak in your state,
What I have done that misbecame my place shall Come the mild judge and interceder both.
Mass.

To sentence man.

2. To condemn; to doom to punishment.

Could that decree from our brother come?
Nature herself is sentenced in your doom.
Pity is no more. Daniel.

Idleness, sentenced by the decurions, was punished
by many stripes. Terence.

SENTENTIOSITY. n. f. [from sententia.]

Comprehension in a sentence.

Vulgar precepts in morality carry with them nothing above the line, or beyond the extemporary sententiousness of common counsels with us. Bacon.

SENTENTIOUS. adj. [sententiosus, Fr. in
the noun.]

1. Abounding with sentences, axioms, and maxims, short and energetic.

He is very swift and sententious. Shakspeare.

Foretold as useful and sententious in the state. Isa.

How he spurs his fire, Ambitiously sententious. Addison.

Comprising sentences.

The making of figures being tedious, and requiring much room, put men first upon contracting them, as by the most ancient Egyptian monuments it appears they did: next, instead of sententious marks, to think of verbal, such as the Chinese still retain. Grew.

SENTENTIOUSLY. adv. [from sententious.]

In short sentences; with striking brevity. They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententiously: they say, look how many feathers the hath, so many eyes she hath underneath. Bacon.
Nauicaa delivers her judgment sententiously, to give it more weight. Broome.

SENTENTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from sententious.] Pithiness of sentences; brevity with strength.

The Medea I esteem for the gravity and sententiousness of it, which he himself concludes to be suitable to a tragedy. Dryden.

SENTINEL. n. f. [This is commonly written sentry, corrupted from sentinel.] One who is set to watch in a garrison, or in the outlines of an army.

What strength, what art, can then suffice, or what evasion bear him safe Through the strict sentinels, and stations thick Of angels watching round? Milton.

SENTIENT. adj. [sentiens, Lat.] Perceiving; having perception.

The acting of the sentient phantasy is performed by a presence of sense, as the horie is under the sense of hunger, and that, without any formal syllogism, prebels him to eat. Hale.

SENTIENT. n. f. [from the adjective.] He that has perception.

If the sentient be carried, passibus æquis, with the body whole motion it would observe, supposing it regular, the remove is infensible. Glanville.

SENTIMENT. n. f. [sentiment, Fr.]

1. Thought; notion; opinion.
The consideration of the reason why they are annexed to so many other ideas, serving to give us due sentiments of the wisdom and goodness of the sovereign Disposer of all things, may not be unsuitable to the main end of these enquiries. Locke.

Alike to council or th' assembly came, With equal souls and sentiments the same. Pope.

2. The sense considered distinctly from the language or things; a striking sentence in a composition.

Those who could no longer defend the conduct of Cato, praised the sentiments. Dennis.

SENTINEL. n. f. [sentinelle, Fr. from sentio, Lat.] One who watches or keeps guard to prevent surprise.

Norfolk, lie thee to thy charge; Use careful watch, chuse trusty sentinels. Shaksp.

Counsellors are not commonly so united, but that one counsellor keepeth sentinel over another, so that if any do counsel out of faction or private ends, it commonly comes to the king's ear. Bacon.

First, the two eyes, which have the seeing power, stand as one watchman, spy, or sentinel.

Being plac'd aloft, within the head's high tow'r, And though both see, yet both but one thing tell. Darwin.

Love's our citadel's resorts, Through those deceitful fallports; Our sentinels betray our forts. Denham.

The senses are situated in the head, as sentinels in a watch-tower, to receive and convey to the mind the impressions of external objects. Ray.

Perhaps they had sentinels waking while they slept, but even this would be unsoldierlike. Broome.

SENTINEL. n. f. [corrupted, I believe, from sentinel.]

1. A watch; a sentinel; one who watches in a garrison, or army, to keep them from surprise.

If I do send, dispatch

Those sentinels to our aid; the rest will serve For a short holding. Shakspere.

The youth of hell's fiercest guard may keep, And let their sentinels to the utmost deep. Dryden.

One goose they had, 'twas all they could allow, A wakeful sentry, and on duty now. Dryden.

2. Guard; watch; the duty of a sentinel.

Thou, whose nature cannot sleep, O'er my slumbers sentry keep; Guard me 'gainst those watchful foes, Whose eyes are open while mine close. Brown.

Here toils and death, and death's half-brother, sleep, Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep. Dryden.

SEPARABILITY. n. f. [from separable.]

The quality of admitting disunion or disconnection.

Separability is the greatest argument of real distinction. Glanville.

The greatest argument of real distinction is separability, and actual separation, for nothing can be separated from itself. Norris.

SEPARABLE. adj. [separable, Fr. separabilis, Lat. from separate.]

1. Susceptive of disunion; disceptible.

The infusions and decoctions of plants contain the most separable parts of the plants, and convey not only their nutritious but medicinal qualities into the blood. Ashburn.

2. Possible to be disjoined from something; with from.

Expansion and duration have this further agreement, that tho' they are both considered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not separable one from another. Locke.

SEPARABLENESS. n. f. [from separable.]

Capableness of being separated.

Trials permit me not to doubt of the separableness of a yellow tincture from gold. Boyle.

TO SEPARATE. v. a. [separo, Lat. separare, Fr.]

1. To break; to divide into parts.

2. To disunite; to disjoin.

Ever separate he wold. Milton.

3. Secret; secluded.

In a secret vale the Trojan fires A separate grove. Dryden.

4. Disunited from the body; disengaged from corporeal nature. An emphatical sense.

Whatever ideas the mind can receive and contemplate without the help of the body, it can retain without the help of the body too; or, else the soul or any separate spirit, will have but little advantage by thinking. Locke.

SEPARATELY. adv. [from separate.]

Apart; singly; not in union; distinctly; particularly.

It is of singular use to princes, if they take the opinions of their council both separately and together; for private opinion is more free, but opinion before others is more reserved. Bacon.

If you admit of many figures, conceive the whole together, and not every thing separately and in particular. Dryden.

SEPARATENESS. n. f. [from separate.] The state of being separate.

SEPARATION. n. f. [separatio, Lat. separatio, Fr. from separate.]

1. The act of separating; disjunction.

They have a dark opinion, that the soul doth live after the separation from the body. Abbot.

Any part of our bodies, vitally united to that which is conscious in us, makes a part of ourselves; but upon separation from the vital union, by which that consciousness is communicated, that, which a moment since was part of ourselves, is now no more so. Locke.

2. The state of being separate; disunion.

As the confusion of tongues was a mark of separation, so the being of one language was a mark of union. Bacon.

3. The chymical analysis, or operation of disuniting things mingled.

A fifteenth part of silver, incorporated with gold, will not be recovered by any matter of separation, unless you put a greater quantity of silver, which is the last refuge in separations. Bacon.

4. Divorce; disjunction from a married state.

Did you not hear A buzzing of a separation Between the king and Catharine? Shakspere.

SEPARATIST. n. f. [separatiste, Fr. from separate.] One who divides from the church; a schismatick; a seceder.

The separatists, separatists, and seceders tenets are full of schism, and inconsistent with monarchy. Bacon.

Our modern separatists pronounce all those heretical, or carnal, from whom they have withdrawn. Decay of Piety.

Says the separatist, if those, who have the role over you, should command you any thing about church affairs, you ought not, in conscience, to obey them. South.

SEPARATOR. n. f. [from separate.] One who divides; a divider.

SEPARATORY. adj. [from separate.] Used in separation.

The most conspicuous gland of an animal is the system of the guts, where the lacteals are the emissary vessels, or separatory ducts. Cheyne.

SEPT. n. f. [septum, Lat.] A clan; a race; a family; a generation. A word used only with regard or allusion to Ireland, and, I suppose, Irish.

This judge, being the lord's brehon, adjudgeth a better share unto the lord of the soil, or the head of that sept, and also unto himself for his judgment a greater portion, than unto the plaintiffs. Spenser.

The English forces were ever too weak to subdue so many warlike nations, or septs, of the Irish, as did posses this island. Davis.

The true and ancient Russians, a sept whom he had met with in one of the provinces of that vast empire, were white like the Danes. Boyle.

SEPTA'NGULAR. adj. [septem and angulus; Lat.] Having seven corners or sides.

SEPTEMBER. n. f. [Lat. Septembre, Fr.] The ninth month of the year; the seventh from March.

September hath his name as being the seventh month from March; he is drawn with a merry and cheerful countenance, in a purple robe. Peacocks.

SEPTENARY. adj. [septenarius, Latin.] Consisting of seven.

Every controversy has seven questions belonging to it; though the order of nature seems too much neglected by a confinement to this septenary number. Watts.

SEPTENARY. n. f. The number seven. The days of men are cut up by septennies; and every seventh year conceived to carry some altering character in temper of mind or body. Bacon.

These constitutions of Moses, that proceed to touch upon a septennary, or number of seven, have no relation in the nature of the thing. Barnet.

SEPTENNIAL. adj. [septennis, Latin.]

1. Lasting seven years.

2. Happening once in seven years. Being once dispensed with for his septennial visit, by a holy influence from Paphos, he resolved to govern them by tubaltem ministers. Howell.

SEPTENTRION. n. f. [Fr. septentrion, Lat.] The north.

Thou art as opposite to every good

As the antipodes are unto us,

Or as the south to the septentrion. Shakespeare.

SEPTENTRIONAL. adj. [septentrionalis, Latin.]

SEPTENTRIONAL. Lat. septentrional, Fr.] Northern.

Back'd with a ridge of hills,

That fence'd the fronts of the earth and seats of men

From cold septentrional blasts. Milton.

Proceeding should be delicate of rain,

Or blast septentrional with brushing wings

Sweep up the smoky mists and vapours damp,

Then woe to mortals. Philips.

SEPTENTRIONALITY. n. f. [from septentrional.] Northerliness.

SEPTENTRIONALLY. adv. [from septentrional.] Toward the north; northerly.

If they be powerfully excited, and equally let fall, they commonly sink down, and break the water, at that extreme whereat they were septentrionally excited. Brown.

TO SEPTENTRIONATE. v. n. [from septentrion, Lat.] To tend northerly.

Steel and good iron, never excited by the load,

Stones, septentrionate at one extreme, and antiaize at another. Brown.

SEPTICIDAL. adj. [septicidus.] Having power to promote or produce putrefaction.

As a septicidic medicine, Galen commended the ashes of a salamander. Brown.

SEPTILATERAL. adj. [septem and lateris, Lat.] Having seven sides.

By an equal interval they make seven triangles, the bases whereof are the seven sides of a septilateral base, described within a circle. Brown.

SEPTUAGENARY. adj. [septuagenarius, Lat. septuagenaire, Fr.] Consisting of seventy.

The three hundred years of John of times, or Nestor, cannot afford a reasonable encouragement beyond Moses's septuagenary determination. Brown.

SEPTUAGESIMAL. adj. [septuagesimus, Lat.] Consisting of seventy.

1. In our abridged and septuagesimal age, it is very rare to behold the fourth generation. Brown.

SEPTUAGINT. n. f. [septuaginta, Latin.]

The old Greek version of the Old Testament, so called as being supposed the work of seventy-two interpreters.

Which way soever you try, you shall find the product great enough for the extent of this earth;

and if you follow the septuagesimal chronology, it will still be far higher. Barnet.

SEPTUPLE. adj. [septuplex, Lat. Seven times as much.] A technical term.

SEPTULCHRAL. adj. [sepulchral, Fr. sepulchralis, from sepulchrum, Lat.] Relating to burial; relating to the grave; monumental.

Whilst our souls negotiate there,

We like sepulchral statues lay;

All day the same our postures were,

And we laid nothing all the day. Donne.

Mine eye hath found that sepulchral rock,

That was the casket of heaven's richest store. Milton.

Sepulchral lies our holy walls to grace,

And new-year odors. Pope.

SEPULCHRE. n. f. [sepulchre, Fr. sepulchrum, Lat.] A grave; a tomb.

To entomb him and 's heirs unto the crown,

What is it but to make thy sepulchre? Shakespeare.

Flies and spiders get a sepulchre in amber, more durable than the monument and embalming of any king. Bacon.

There, where the virgin's son his doctrine taught,

His miracles, and our redemption wrought;

Where I, by thee inspir'd, his praise sung,

And on his sepulchre my offering hung. Sandys.

Perpetual lamps for many hundred years have continued burning, without supply, in the sepulchres of the ancients. Wilkins.

It not one common sepulchre contains

Our bodies, or one urn our last remains,

Yet Cæsar and Alcione shall join. Dryden.

TO SEPULCHRE. v. a. [from the noun.]

It is accented on the second syllable by Shakespeare and Milton; on the first, more properly, by Jonson and Prior.] To bury; to entomb.

Go to thy lady's grave, and call her thence;

Or, at the least, in her sepulchre thine. Shaksp.

I am glad to see that time survive,

Where merit is not sepulchred alive;

Where good men's virtues them to honours bring,

And not to dangers. Ben Jonson.

Thou to sepulchred in such pomp dost lie,

That kings for such a tomb would wish to die. Milton.

Disparted streams shall from their channels fly,

And, deep furch'd, by sandy mountains lie

Obscurely sepulchred. Prior.

SEPULCHRE. n. f. [sepulchre, Fr. sepulchra, Lat.] Interment; burial.

That Niobe, weeping over her children, was turned into a stone, was nothing else but that during her life she erected over her sepulchre a marble tomb of her own. Brown.

Where we may royal sepulchre prepare;

With speed to Melinda bring relief;

Recall her spirits, and moderate her grief. Dryden.

In England, sepulchre or burial of the dead may be deferred and put off for the debts of the person deceased. Ayliffe.

SEQUE'CIOS. adj. [sequacis, Lat.]

1. Following; attendant.

Opheus could lead the savage race,

And trees uprooted left their place,

Sequecious of the lyre;

But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher:

When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,

An angel heard,

And straight appear'd,

Mistaking earth for heav'n. Dryden.

Above those superstitious horrors that enslave

The fond sequacious herd, to my sick faith

And blind amazement prone, th' enlighten'd few

The glorious stranger hail. Thomson.

2. Ductile; pliant.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious, and obedient to the hand and stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, or moulded. Ray.

SEQUE'CIOS. n. f. [from sequax, Latin.]

Ductility; toughness.

Matter, whereof creatures are produced, hath a closeknelt, lentor, and sequacity. Bacon.

SEQUEL. n. f. [sequelle, Fr. sequela, Lat.]

1. Conclusion; succeeding part.

If black scandal or foul-lac'd reproach

Attend the sequel of your imposition,

Your meek enforcement shall acquaintance me. Shakespeare.

Was he not a man of wisdom? Yes, but he was poor; but was he not also successful? True, but he was poor; grant this, and you cannot keep that unavoidable sequel in the next vein, the man's wisdom is despised. Shakespeare.

2. Consequence; event.

Let any principal thing, as the sun or the moon,

but once cease, fail, or twerve, and who does not easily conceive that the sequel thereof will be ruin both to itself and whatsoever depends on it? Shakespeare.

In these he put two weights,

The sequel each of parting and of fight. Milton.

3. Consequence inferred; consequentia-

ness.

What sequel is there in this argument? Bacon.

deacon is the chief deacon: ergo, he is a deacon. Bacon.

SEQUENCE. n. f. [from sequor, Lat.]

1. Order of succession. An elegant word, but little used.

How art thou a king,

But by fair sequence and succession? Shakespeare.

2. Series; arrangement; method.

The cause proceeded from a precedent sequence and series of the seasons of the year. Bacon.

SEQUENT. adj. [sequens, Latin.]

1. Following; succeeding.

Let my trial be mine own confession:

Immediate sentence then, and sequent death,

Is all the grace I beg. Shakespeare.

There he dies, and leaves his race

Growing into a nation; and now grows

Subjected to a sequent king, who seeks

To stop their overgrowth. Milton.

2. Consequential.

SEQUENT. n. f. [from the adjective.] A follower. Not in use.

Here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of stranger queen's, which at evidently means a stranger. Shakespeare.

TO SEQUESTER. v. a. [sequester, Fr. sequester, Spanish; sequeiro, low Latin.]

1. To separate from others for the sake of privacy.

Why are you sequester'd from all your train?

Shakespeare.

To the which place a poor sequester'd man

That from the hunter's aim had taken a hurt,

Did come to languish. Shakespeare.

In shady bow't

More sacred and sequester'd, though but for a

Pan or Sylvanus never slept. Milton.

Ye sacred Nine! that all my soul praises,

Whole raptures fire me, and whole visions fill;

Bear me, oh bear me, to sequester'd scenes

Of bow'ry mazes, and surrounding greens. Pope.

2. To put aside; to remove.

Although I had wholly sequester'd my affairs, yet I set down, out of experience in books, and conversation in books, what I thought pertinent to this affair. Bacon.

3. To withdraw; to segregate.

A thing as reasonable in grief as in joy, is recent being added unto actions of great weight and solemnity, as being used when men will sequester themselves from action. Howell.

4. To set aside from the use of the owner to that of others: as, his annuity is sequestered to pay his creditors.

5. To deprive of possessions.

It was his taylor and his cook, his five followers and his French ragouts, which sequestered him, and, in a word, he came by his poverty as naturally

as some usually do by their riches. Shakespeare.

SEQUESTERABLE. adj. [from sequester.]

1. Subject to privation.

2. Capable of separation.

Harthorn, and divers other bodies belonging to the animal kingdom, abound with a not usefully separable seraph.

SERENATE. v. n. To serenate; to separate.

In general contagions, more perils for want of necessities, than by the malignity of the disease, they being serenated from mankind. Arbutnot.
SERENATION. n. f. [serenation, French; from serenate.]

Separation; retirement.

His addition was to courtes vain;

He never noted in him any study,

Any retirement, any serenation

From open haunts and popularity. Shakespeare.

There must be leisure, retirement, solitude, and a separation of a man's self from the noise of the world, for truth seems to be seen by eyes much less than inferior objects. South.

1. Disunion; disjunction.

The metals remain unseparated, the fire only dividing the body into smaller particles, hindering it and consuming, without any serenation of elementary principles. Boyle.

2. State of being set aside.

Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign, I have whose glory I was great in arms, no loathsome serenation have I had. Shaksp.

Deprivation of the use and profits of a possession.

It there be a single spot in the globe more barren, the vector or vector may be obliged, by the voice or punge of the bishop, to build upon it, under pain of serenation. Swift.

SERENATOR. n. f. [from serenate.] One who takes from a man the profit of his possessions.

I am fallen into the hands of publicans and serenators, and they have taken all from me. Taylor.

SERENGO. n. f. [Italian; perhaps of oriental origin.] The g is lost in the pronunciation.] A house of women kept for debauchery.

There is a great deal more solid content to be found in a constant course of well living, than in voluptuousness of a serengo. Norris.

SERAPH. n. f. [שֵׁרָפִים.] One of the orders of angels.

He is infinitely more remote, in the real excellency this nature, from the highest and perfectest of all created beings, than the purest seraph is from the most contemptible part of matter, and consequently infinitely exceeds what our narrow understandings can conceive of him. Leake.

As full, as perfect, in vile man that mourns, as the purest seraph that adores and burns. Pope.

SERAPHICAL. adj. [seraphique, French; SERAPHICK.] from seraph.]

Angelical; angelical.

Love is curious of little things, desiring to be of celestial purity, of perfect innocence, and seraphical fervour. Taylor.

Scourge arms and trophies.

Pure; refused from sensuality.

Is to the world a secret yet,

Whether the nymph, to please her swain,

As on a high romantick strain;

Or whether he at last descends

Like with less seraphick ends. Swift.

SERAPHIM. n. f. [This is properly the plural of seraph, and therefore cannot have s added; yet, in compliance with our language, seraphims is sometimes written.] Angels of one of the heavenly orders.

To these cherubim and seraphims continually do

Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having

His coal in his hand. Isaiah.

Of seraphim another row. Milton.

SER. adj. [reapian, Saxon, to dry.] Dry; withered; no longer green. See SEAR.

The mules, that were wont green boys to wear,
Now bringer bitter elder-branches ser. Spenser.
He is deformed, crooked, old, and ser.
Ill-fac'd, worse bodied, shapeless every where;
Vicious, ungentle. Shakespeare.

Are this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams

Reflected may with matter ser. Milton.
They ser. wood from the rotten hedges took,
And seeds of latent fire from flints provoke Deighton.

On a ser. branch,
Low bending to the bank, I sat me down,

Musing and still. Rome.
SERE. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor, except from the passage, the meaning. Can it come, like thers, from reypian, Saxon, to cut? Claw; talon.

Two eagles,
That mounted on the wings, together still
Their strokes extended; but arriving now
Amidst the council, over every brow Shook their thick wings, and threatening death's cold fears,

Their necks and cheeks tore with their eager seres.
Chapman.

SERENADE. n. f. [serenade, French; serenata, Italian; whence, in Milton, serenate, from serenus, Latin; the lovers commonly attending their mistresses in fair nights.] Mince or songs with which ladies are entertained by their lovers in the night.

Mixt dance, or wanton mask, or midnight ball,
Or serenate, which the stars'd lover sings
To his proud fair; best quitted with disdain. Milton.

Foolish swallow, what dost thou
So often at my window do,
With thy tuncless serenade? Cowley.
Shall I the neighbours nightly rest invade,
At her dead doors, with some vile serenade? Dryden.

Will fancies he never should have been the man
he is, had not he broke windows, and disturbed honest people with his midnight serenades, when he was a young fellow. Addison.

To SERENADE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To entertain with nocturnal music.

He continued to serenade her every morning,
till the queen was chained with his harmony. Spectator.

SERENE. adj. [seren, French; serenus,
Latin.]

Sparks live milder'd
In regions mild of calm and serene air. Milton.

The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.

2. Unruffled; undisturbed; even of temper; peaceful or calm of mind; showing a calm mind.

There wanted yet a creature might erect
His stature, and upright with front serene Govern the rest. Milton.

Exciting them, by a due remembrance of all that is past, unto future circumspection, and a serene expectation of the future life. Greene.

Gutta-SERENA. n. f. An obstruction in the optic nerve.

These eyes that roll in vain,
So thick a drop serene hath quenched their orbs. Milton.

SERENE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A calm damp evening.

Wherever death doth please to appear,
Seas, serenes, fowls, shot, sickness, all are there. Ben Jonson.

To SERENE. v. a. [serener, Fr. sereno,
Latin.]

1. To calm; to quiet.

2. To clear; to brighten. Not proper.

Take care
Thy muddy beverage to serene, and drive
Precipitant the baser rosy lees. Philips.

SERENELY. adv. [from serene.]

1. Calmly; quietly.

The setting sun now shone serenely bright. Pope.

2. With unruffled temper; coolly.

Whatever practical rule is generally broken, can not be supposed innate, it being impossible that men would, without shame or fear, confidently and serenely break a rule, which they could not but evidently know that God had set up. Locke.

The nymph did like the teene appear,
Serenely pleasant, calmly fair

Soft tell her words as flow the air. Prior.

SERENESS. n. f. [from serene.] Serenity.

SERENITUDE. n. f. [from serene.] Calmness; coolness of mind. Not in use.

From the equal distribution of the phlegmatick humour will flow quiescence and serenitude in the affections. Wotton.

SERENITY. n. f. [Serenité, French; from serenus, Latin.]

1. Calmness; mild temperate.

In the constitution of a perpetual equinox, the best part of the globe would be desolate, and as to that little that would be inhabited, there is no reason to expect that it would constantly enjoy that admired calm and serenity. Beautley.

Pure serenity apace
Induces thought, and contemplation still. Thomson.

2. Peace; quietness; not disturbance.

A general peace and serenity newly succeeded a general trouble and cloud throughout all his kingdoms. Temple.

3. Evenness of temper; coolness of mind.

I cannot see how any men should ever transcend those moral rules, with confidence and serenity, were they innate, and stamped upon their minds. Locke.

SERGE. n. f. [Serge, French; serga, Spanish, which Covarruvias derives from arica, Arabic; Sanner from serge, German, a mat.] A kind of woollen cloth.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves into cloth, another into kersey or serge, and another into arras. Hale.

Ye weavers, all your shuttles throw,
And bid brood of cloths and serges grow. Gay.

SERGEANT. n. f. [Sergent, Fr. Sergente, Italian, from serenus, Latin.]

1. An officer whose business it is to execute the commands of magistrates.

Had I but time, I should tell Sergeant, Death,
Is that in his arch, who I could tell. Shakespeare.
When it was day, the nightmen beat the sergeants, saying, Let them men go. Act.

2. A petty officer in the army.

This is the Sergeant.
Who like a good and hardy soldier fought. Shakespeare.

3. A lawyer of the highest rank under a judge.

None should be made Sergeants, but such as probably might be held fit to be judges afterwards. Baron.

4. It is a title given to some of the king's servants: as, Sergeant-chirurgian; that is, a chirurgurgeon Sergeant to the king.

SERGEANTRY. n. f. [from Sergeant.]

Grand Sergeantry is that which our holiest lands of the king by Serjeant, which he ought to do in his own person unto him: as to bear the king's banner or his spear, or to lead his host, or to be his marshal, or to blow a horn, when he forth by enemies invade the land; or to find a man at arms to fight within the four seas, or else to do himself; or to bear the king's sword before him at his coronation, or on that day to be his sewer, carver, butler, or chamberlain. Petit Sergeantry is where a man holdeth land of the king, to yield him yearly some small thing toward his wars, as a sword, dagger, bow, knife, spear, pair of gloves of mail, a pair of spurs, or such like. Cowell.

S E R

SERGEANTSHIP. n. f. [from sergeant.]

The office of a sergeant.

SERIES. n. f. [Serie, Fr. series, Latin.]

1. Sequence; order.

Draw out that antecedent, by reflecting briefly upon the text, as it lies in the series of the epistle.

The chains of the correspondence I cannot supply, having destroyed too many letters to preserve any series.

2. Succession; course.

This is the series of perpetual war,
Which thou, alas! and thine are born to know.

SERIOUS. adj. [sericus, Fr. serius, Lat.]

1. Grave; solemn; not volatile; not light of behaviour.

Ah! my friends! while we laugh, all things are serious round about us: God is serious, who exerciseth patience towards us; Christ is serious, who shed his blood for us; the Holy Ghost is serious, who strive against the obduracy of our hearts; the holy scriptures bring to our ears the most serious things in the world; the holy sacraments represent the most serious and awful matters; the whole creation is serious in serving God, and us; all that are in heaven or hell are serious: how then can we be gay? To give these excellent words their full force, it should be known that they came not from the priesthood, but the court; and from a courtier as eminent as England ever boasted.

2. Important; weighty; not trifling.

I'll hence to London on a serious matter.

There's nothing serious in mortality;
All is but toys.

SERIOUSLY. adv. [from serious.] Gravely; solemnly; in earnest; without levity.

It cannot but be matter of very dreadful consideration to any one, sober and in his wits, to think seriously with himself, what horror and confusion must needs surprise that man, at the last day of account, who had led his whole life by one rule, when God intends to judge him by another.

Unthinking planners to o'erspread thy mind,
That thou could'st seriously persuade the crowd
To keep their oaths, and to believe a God.

Julian Martyr, Tertullian, Lactantius, and Arnobius, tell us, that this unworldly first of all made them seriously inquisitive into that religion, which could endure the mind with so much strength, and overcome the fear of death, nay, raise an earnest desire of it, though it appeared in all its terrors.

SERIOUSNESS. n. f. [from serious.] Gravity; solemnity; earnest attention.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of libertinism and profaneness started up in the room of it.

The youth was received at the door by a servant, who then conducted him with great silence and seriousness to a long gallery, which was darkened at noon-day.

SERMOCINATION. n. f. [sermocinatio, Latin.] The act or practice of making speeches.

SERMOCINATOR. n. f. [sermocinator, Lat.] A preacher; a speechmaker.

These obtrusive sermocinators make easily impression upon the minds of the vulgar.

SERMON. n. f. [sermon, Fr. sermo, Lat.] A discourse of instruction pronounced by a divine for the edification of the people.

As for our sermons, be they never so sound and perfect, God's word they are not, as the sermons of the prophets were; no, they are but ambiguously termed his word, because his word is commonly the subject whereof they treat, and must be the rule whereby they are framed.

This one sermon, exempt from publick haunt,
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in flowers, and good in every thing.

Sermons he heard, yet not so many
As left no time to practice any:

S E R

He heard them reverently, and then
His practice preach'd them o'er again.

Many, while they have preached Christ in their sermons, have read a lecture of atheism in their practice.

His preaching much, but more his practice wrought;
A living sermon of the truths he taught.

SERMON. v. a. [sermoner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To discourse as in a sermon.

Some would rather have good discipline delivered plainly by way of precept, or sermoned at large, than thus cloudily inwrapped in allegorical devices.

2. To tutor; to teach dogmatically; to lesson.

Come, sermon me no farther:
No villainous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart.

SERMOUNTAIN, or Sefeli. n. f. [Silex, Latin.] A plant.

SERO'SITY. n. f. [serosité, French.] Thin or watery part of the blood.

In these the salt and lividated serosity is divided between the guts and the bladder; but it remains undivided in birds.

The tumour of the throat, which occasions the difficulty of swallowing and breathing, proceeds from a serosity obstructing the glands, which may be watery, adenomatose, or scirrhous, according to the viscosity of the humour.

SEROUS. adj. [serous, Fr. serosus, Lat.]

1. Thin; watery. Used of the part of the blood which separates in congelation from the grumous or red part.

2. Adapted to the serum.

This delicate is commonly an extravasation of serum, received in some cavity of the body; for there may be also a drop by a dilatation of the serous vessels, as that in the ovarium.

SERPENT. n. f. [serpens, Latin.] An animal that moves by undulation without legs. They are often venomous.

They are divided into two kinds: the viper, which brings young; and the snake, that lays eggs.

She was arrayed all in lily white,
And in her right hand bore a serp of gold,
With wine and water fill'd up to the height;
In which a serpent did himself unfold,
That horror made to all that did behold.

She struck me with her tongue,
Most serpent like, upon the very heart.

They, or under ground, or circuit wide,
With serpent error wand'ring, found their way.

The chief I challeng'd; he, whose practice'd wit
Knew all the serpent mazes of deceit,
Flouds my search.

SERPENTINE. adj. [Serpentinus, Latin; from serpent.]

1. Resembling a serpent.

I craved of him to lead me to the top of this rock, with meaning to free him from serpentine a companion as I am.

This of ours is described with legs, wings, a serpentine and winding tail, and a crest or comb somewhat like a cock.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape
Like his, and colour serpentine, may shew
Thy inward fraud.

The figures and their parts ought to have a serpentine and flaming form naturally: these sorts of outlines have I know not what of life and seeming motion in them, which very much resembles the activity of the flame and serpent.

2. Winding like a serpent; anfractuons.

Perfect a circle, or maintain his way
One inch direct; but where he rols to-day
He comes no more, but with a cousing line steers by that point, and so is serpentine.

How many spacious countries does the Rhine,
In winding banks, and masses serpentine,
Traverse, before he splits on Belgia's plain,
And, lost in sand, creeps to the German main:

SERPENTINE. n. f. [dracanium,] An herb.

SERPENTINE Stone. n. f.

There were three species of this stone known among the ancients, all resembling one another, and celebrated for the same virtues. The one was green, variegated with spots of black, thence called the black ophites; another, called the white ophite, was green also, but variegated with spots of white, the third was called tephria, and was of a grey colour, variegated with small black spots. The ancients tell us, that it was a certain remedy against the poison of the bite of serpents; but it is now justly rejected.

Accept in good part a bottle made of a serpentine stone, which hath the quality to give any wine a water, that shall be infused therein for four or twenty hours, the taste and operation of the water, and is very medicinal for the cure of the spleen and gravel.

SERPENT'S Tongue. n. f. [ophioglossa] An herb.

SERPET. n. f. A basket.

SERPIGINOUS. adj. [from serpigo, Latin.] Diseased with a serpio.

The skin behind her ear downwards became serpiginous, and was covered with white scales.

SERPIGO. n. f. [Lat.] A kind of tetter.

For thy own bowels, which do call thee mer,
Do curle the gout, serpigo, and the rheum,
For ending thee no sooner.

She had a node, with pains, on her right side,
and a serpigo on her right hand.

To SERR. v. a. [serrer, French.] To draw hard together; to crowd into a little space. Not received into use, nor deserving reception.

The frowning and knitting of the brows is a gathering or serring of the spirits, to resist in force measure; and also this knitting will follow upon earnest studying, though it be without dislike.

Hent attenuates and sends forth the spirit of the body, and upon that the more gross parts coagulate and serr themselves together.

SERRATE. adj. [serratus, Lat.] Formed like the edge of a saw.

All that have serrate teeth are carnivorous. The common heron hath long legs for a long neck answerable thereto to reach prey, and throat to pouch it, and long toes, with long hooked talons, one of which is remarkably serrate on the edge.

This stick is usually knotted, and always armed one of them with a curious shark's tooth near an inch long, and indented or serrated on both edges a scurvy weapon.

SERRATION. n. f. [from serra, Latin.] Formation in the shape of a saw.

SERRATURE. n. f. [from serra, Latin.] Indenture like teeth of saws.

These are serrated on the edges; but the serratures are deeper and grosser than in any of the rest.

To SERRAY. v. a. [serrer, French; serrare, Italian.] To press close; to drive hard together. For serry, Bacon uses serr; but neither serr nor serry are received.

With them role
A forest huge of spears; and thronging helms
Appear'd, and serr'd shields in thick array.
Of death immeasurable.
Foul dissipation follow'd, and serr'd rout.
Nor serr'd it to relax their serr'd files.

SERVANT. n. f. [servant, Fr. servus, Lat.]

S E R

His hand th' adorned firmament display'd,
Thine serpentine yet constant motion made.

How many spacious countries does the Rhine,

15. Favour.

To thee a woman's services are due, My fool usurps my body.

16. Publick office of devotion.

According to this form of theirs, it must stand for a rule, No sermon, no service.

If that very service of God in the Jewish synagogues, which our Lord did approve and sanctify with his own presence, had so large portions of the law and prophets, together with the many prayers and psalms read day by day, as equal in a manner the length of ours, and yet in that respect was never thought to deserve blame; is it now an offence, that the like measure of time is bestowed in the like manner?

I know no necessity why private and single abilities should quite pulse out and deprive the church of the joint abilities and concurrent gifts of many learned and godly men, such as the compilers of the service book were.

The congregation was discomposed, and divine service broken off.

17. Course; order of dithes.

Cleopatra made Antony a supper sumptuous and royal, howbeit there was no extraordinary service seen on the board.

18. A tie and fruit. [forbus, Latin.]

The flower consists of several leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose, whose flower-cup afterwards becomes a fruit shaped like a pear or medlar; to which must be added, pennated leaves like that of the ash.

October is drawn in a garment of yellow and carnation; in his left hand a basket of services, medlars, and other fruits that ripen late.

SERVICEABLE. adj. [serviceable, old Fr. from service.]

1. Active; diligent; officious.

He was sent to the king's court, with letters from that officer, containing his own serviceable diligence in discovering to great a personage; adding withal more than was true of his conjectures.

I know thee well, a serviceable villain; As dutious to the vices of thy mistress As badness could desire.

2. Useful; beneficial.

Religion hath force to qualify all sorts of men, and to make them, in publick affairs, the more serviceable; governing the apter to rule with conscience; inferiors, for conscience sake, the willing to obey.

So your father charg'd me at our parting, Be serviceable to my son.

His own inclinations were to confine himself to his own business, and be serviceable to religion and learning.

A book to justify the revolution archbishop Tillotson recommended to the king, as the most serviceable treatise that could have been published then.

SERVICEABLENESS. n. f. [from serviceable.]

1. Officiousness; activity.

He might continually be in her presence, serving more humble service, and joy to content her than ever before.

2. Usefulness; beneficialness.

All action being for some end, its aptness to be commanded or forbidden must be founded upon its serviceableness or disserviceableness to some end.

SERVILE. adj. [servil, French; servilis, Latin.]

1. Slavish; dependant; mean.

Eight and death is death destroying death; Where fearing dying, pays death's servile breath.

From imposition of strict laws to free Acceptance of large grace, from servile fear To filial.

Ev'n fortune rules no more a servile hand, Where exil'd tyrants still by tuns command.

2. Fawning; cringing.

The most servile flattery is lodged the most easily in the greatest capacity, for their ordinary conceit draws them yielding to their greater, and then have they not wit to discern the right degree of duty.

She must bend the servile knee, And fawning take the splendid robber's boon.

SERVILELY. adv. [from servile.] Meanly; slavishly.

* T' each changing news they chang'd affections bring, And servilely from fate expect a king.

He affects a singularity in his actions and thoughts, rather than servilely to copy from the wick.

SERVILENESS. n. f. [from servile.]

1. Subjection; involuntary obedience.

What, besides this unhappy servility to custom, can possibly reconcile men, that own christianity, to a practice widely distant from it?

The angels and demons, those by their subterfuge, and these by the servility of their obedience, mutually declared Christ and his apostles to be velted with an authority derived from their Lord.

SERVILITY. n. f. [from servile.]

SERVING-MAN. n. f. [serve and man.]

A menial servant.

Your niece did more favours to the duke's serving-man than ever she bestowed on me.

Just in the nick; the cook knock'd thrice, And all the waiters in a trice

Each serving-man, with dish in hand, March'd boldly up, like our train'd band,

Presented, and away.

With Dennis you did ne'er combine, Not you, to steal your master's wine;

Except a bottle now and then, To welcome brother serving-men.

SET. n. f. [for asse, cese, or cense.] Rate; cess charged; tax.

His army was so ill paid and governed, as the English suffered more damage by the set of his soldiers, than they gained profit or security by beating the pride of their enemies. Darics.

SESSION. n. f. [sessio, Fr. sessio, Latin.]

The act of sitting.

He hath as much, not as God only, a supreme dominion over quick and dead; for so much his entrance into heaven, and his session at the right hand of God, do import. Hooker.

Many, though they concede a table-gesture, will hardly allow this usual way of session. Brown.

A state assembly of magistrates or senators.

They are ready to appear

Where you shall hold your session. Shakespeare.

See non a session, that we may arraign

Our most diloyal lady. Shakespeare.

The old man, mindful full of morn,

Woe-pung, thus bespake the session. Chapman.

Of then session ended they bid cry

The great refusal. Milton.

Call'd to council all the Achaian states,

Nor herald sworn the session to proclaim. Pope.

The space for which an assembly sits,

without intermission or recess.

It was contrary to the course of parliament, that any bill that had been rejected should be again presented the same session. Clarendon.

The second Nicene council affords us plentiful assistance in the first session, wherein the pope's war declares that Meletius was ordain'd by Arian bishops, and yet his ordination was never question'd.

Many decrees are enacted, which at the next session are repealed. Norris.

A meeting of justices: as, the sessions of the peace.

STERCE. n. f. [sesterce, Fr. sestertium,

Lat.] Among the Romans, a sum of about 8l. 1s. 5d. half-penny sterling.

Several of them would rather chuse a sum in sterces, than in pounds sterling. Addison.

SET. v. a. preterit I set; part. pass. I am set. [satjan, or satjan, Gothick;

pretan, Sax. setten, Dutch.]

To place; to put in any situation or place; to put.

Ere I could

Give him that parting kiss which I had set

Between two charming words, comes in my father.

But that my admirable dexterity of wit, counteracting the action of an old woman, delivered me the knave constable had set me in the common place for a witch. Shakespeare.

They that are younger have me in derision, hate fathers I would have disdained to have set with the dogs of my flock. Job.

He that hath received his testimony, hath set to seal, that God is true. John.

They have set her a bed in the midst of the flain.

God set them in the firmament, to give light on the earth. Ezekiel.

She sets the bar that causes all my pain;

she giveth refusal, makes all their bounty vain.

The lives of the revealers may be justly enough over against the revelation, to find whether they agree. Atterbury.

To put into any condition, state, or posture.

They thought the very disturbance of things laboured on hire sufficient to set them on work.

That man that sits within a monarch's heart;

could he abuse the countenance of the king,

how, what mischief might he do, for a monarch

Shakespeare.

SET

Our princely general,

Will give your audience; and whereas

It shall appear that your demands are just,

You shall enjoy them; every thing set off

That might be much as think you enemies. Shakespeare.

This present enterprise set off his head,

I do not think a braver gentleman

Is now alive. Shakespeare.

Ye caused every man his servant, whom he had set at liberty, to return. Jeremiah.

Every sabbath ye shall set it in order. Leviticus.

I am come to set a man at variance against his father. Matthew.

Thou shalt pour out into all those vessels, and set aside that which is full. 2 Kings.

The beauty of his ornament he set in majesty,

but they made images; therefore have I set it far from them. Ezekiel.

The gates of thy land shall be set wide open

Nahum.

The fathers have eaten a four grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge. Jeremiah.

The shipping might be set on work by sitting, by transportations from port to port. Bacon.

This wheel, set on going, did pour a war upon the Venetians with such a tempest, as Padua and Trevigi were taken from them. Bacon.

That this may be done with the more advantage,

some hours must be set apart for this examination.

Finding the river fordable at the foot of the bridge, he set over his horse. Hayward.

By his aid aspiring

To set himself in glory above his peers. Milton.

Equal success had set these champions high,

And both resolv'd to conquer or to die. Waller.

Nothing renders a man so inconsiderable; for it sets him above the meaner sort of company, and makes him intolerable to the better. Government of the Tongue.

Some are reclaimed by punishment, and some are set right by good nature. Locke.

The fire was form'd, the sets the kettle on.

Leda's present came

To ruin Troy, and set the world on flame. Dryden.

Set calf betimes to school, and let him be instructed there in rules of husbandry. Dryden.

Over-labour'd with so long a come,

'Tis time to set at ease the smoking horse. Dryden.

The punish'd crime shall set my soul at ease,

And murm'ring manes of my friend appease. Dryden.

Love call'd in haste

The son of Mena, with severe decree,

To kill the keeper, and to set her free. Dryden.

If such a tradition were at any time endeavour'd to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment. Tillotson.

When the father looks down on the child, every body else should put on the same goldness, till forgiveness be set, and a reformation of his fault has set him right again, and restored him to his former credit. Locke.

His practice must by no means cross his precepts, unless he intend to set him wrong. Locke.

If the fear of absolute and irresistible power set it on upon the mind, the idea is likely to sink the deeper. Locke.

When he has once chosen it, it raises desire that proportionably gives him uneasiness, which determines his will, and sets him at work in pursuit of his choice on all occasions. Locke.

This river,

When nature's self lay ready to expire,

Quench'd the due flame that set the world on fire. Addison.

A couple of lovers agreed, at parting, to set aside one half hour in the day to think of each other. Addison.

Your fortunes place you far above the necessity of learning, but nothing can set you above the ornament of it. Felton.

Their first movement and impressed notions demand the impulse of an almighty hand to set them on going. Cheyne.

That the wheels were but small, may be guessed from a custom they have of taking them off, and setting them on. Pope.

SET

Be frequent in setting such causes at work, whose effects you desire to know. Watts.

3. To make motionless; to fix immove-

ably.

Struck with the sight, inanimate she seems,

Set are her eyes, and motionless her limbs. Garth.

4. To fix; to state by some rule.

Hereon the prompter fails to flat railing in the bitterest terms; which the gentleman, with a set gesture and countenance, still soberly related,

until the ordinary, driven at last into a mad rage,

was fain to give over. Carver.

The town of Bern has handsome fountains planted, at set distances, from one end of the streets to the other. Addison.

5. To regulate; to adjust.

In court they determine the king's good by his desires, which is a kind of setting the sun by the dial. Suckling.

God bears a different respect to places set apart and consecrated to his worship, to what he bears to places designed to common uses. South.

Our palates grow into a liking of the seasoning and cookery which by custom they are set to. Locke.

He rules the church's blest dominions,

And sets men's faith by his opinions. Prior.

Against experience he believes,

He argues against demonstration;

Pleas'd when his reason he deceives,

And sets his judgment by his passion. Prior.

6. To fit to music; to adapt with notes.

Set thy own songs, and sing them to thy late.

Dryden.

God set the tunes that fetters it in verse;

But when I have done so,

Some man, his wit or voice to show,

Doth set and sing my pain;

And, by delighting many, frees again

Grief, which verse did restrain. Denne.

I had one day set the hundredth psalm, and was singing the first line, in order to put the congregation into the tune. Spectator.

7. To plant, not sow.

Whosoever trust useth to be set upon a root or a slip, it it be torn, will degenerate. Bacon.

I prostrate fell,

To shrubs and plants my vile devotion paid;

And set the bearded lock to which I pray'd. Prior.

8. To interperse or variegate with any thing.

As with stars, then bodies all,

And wings, were set with eyes. Milton.

High on their heads, with jewels richly set,

Each lady wore a radiant coronet. Dryden.

The body is smooth on that end, and on this it is set with ridges round the point. Woodward.

9. To reduce from a fractured or dislocated state.

Can honour set to a leg? no: or an arm? no:

honour hath no skill in surgery than no. Shakespeare.

Considering what an orderly life I had led, I only commanded that my arm and leg should be set, and my body unanointed with oil. Herbert.

The fracture was at both the joints of the left leg: he had been in great pain from the time of the setting. Wise.

Credit is gained by course of time, and seldom recovers a ruin; but, if broken, is never well set again. Temple.

10. To fix the affection; to determine the thoughts.

Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. Colossians.

They should set their hope in God, and not forget his works. Psalms.

Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, the heart of men is fully set in them to do evil. Ecclesiasticus.

Scous I found wond'rous harsh,

Contemptions, proud, set on revenge and spite.

Milton.

Set not thy heart

Thus overfond on that which is not thine.

When we are well, our hearts are set,

Which way we care not, to be rich or great.

Denham.

SET

Our hearts are so much set upon the value of the benefits received, that we never think of the benefit.

Their bubbles of the shallowest, emptiest sorrow, Which children vent for toys, and women rain For any trifle their fond hearts are set on.

Should we set our hearts only upon these things, and be able to taste no pleasure but what is sensual, we must be extremely miserable when we come into the other world, because we should meet with nothing to entertain ourselves.

No sooner is one a non-dispatched, which we are set upon, but another measure is ready to set us on work.

Minds, altogether set on trade and profit, often contract a certain narrowness of temper.

Men take an ill-natured pleasure in disappointing us in what our hearts are most set upon.

An Englishman, who has any degree of reflection, cannot be better awakened to a sense of religion in general, than by observing how the minds of all mankind are set upon this important point, and how every nation is attentive to the great business of their being.

I am much concerned when I see young gentlemen of fortune to wholly set upon pleasures, that they neglect all improvements in wisdom and knowledge.

To predetermine; to settle.

We may full doubt whether the Lord, in such indulgent ceremonies as those which we dispute, doth use his people of set purpose unto any utter dissimilitude with Egyptians, or with any other nation.

He remembers only the name of Conon, and forgets the other, on set purpose, to show his country swain was no great scholar.

To establish; to appoint; to fix.

Of all helps for due performance of this service, the greatest is that very set and standing order itself, which, framed with common advice, hath for matter and form prescribed whatsoever is herein publicly done.

It pleased the king to send me, and I set him a time.

He *set*th an end to darkness, and searcheth out all perfection.

In Rhodes, whatsoever a man commandeth upon himself, let him set hours for it; but whatsoever is agreeable to his nature, let him take no care for any set times; for his thoughts will fly to it of themselves, so as the spaces of other business or studies will suffice.

For using set and prescribed forms, there is no doubt but that wholesome words, being known, are apt to excite judicious and fervent affections.

His feed, when is not set, shall bruise my head.

Though set form of prayer be an abomination, Set forms of petitions find great approbation.

Set places and set hours are but parts of that worship we owe.

That law cannot keep men from taking more use than you set, the want of money being that alone which regulates its price, will appear, if we consider how hard it is to set a price upon unnecessary commodities; but how impossible it is to set a rate upon vituals in a time of famine.

Set him *set*h a task, to be done in such a time.

Take set times of meditating on what is future.

Should a man go about, with never to set study and design, to describe such a natural form of the year as that which is at present established; he could scarcely ever do it in a few words that were so fit.

To appoint to an office; to assign to a post.

Am I a sea, or a whale, that thou *set*test a watch over me?

As in the subordinations of government the king is offended by any injury to an inferior magistrate, so the sovereign ruler of the universe is affronted by a breach of allegiance to those whom he has set over us.

SET

To exhibit; to display: with before.

Through the variety of my reading, I set before me many examples both of ancient and later times.

Reject not then what offer'd means: who knows But God hath set before us to return the gift

Home to thy country and his sacred house?

Long has my soul desir'd this time and place, To set before your sight your glorious race.

A spacious veil from his broad shoulders drew, That set th' unhappy Phaëton to view:

The flaming chariot and the steeds it shew'd, And the whole fable in the mantle glow'd.

When his fortune sets before him all The pomps and pleasures that his soul can wish,

His rigid virtue will accept of none.

He supplies his not appearing in the present scene of action, by setting his character before us, and continually forcing his patience, prudence, and valour upon our observation.

To propose to choice.

All that can be done is to set the thing before men, and to offer it to their choice.

To value; to estimate; to rate.

Be you contented To have a son set your decrees at nought,

To pluck down justice from your awful bench?

The backwardness parents shew in divulging their faults, will make them set a greater value on their credit themselves, and teach them to be the more careful to preserve the good opinion of others.

If we act by several broken views, and will not only be virtuous, but wealthy, popular, and every thing that has a value set upon it by the world, we shall live and die in misery.

Have I not set at nought my noble birth, A spotless fame, and an unblemish'd race,

The power of innocence, and pride of virtue?

My prodigality has given thee all.

I though the same sun, with all diffusive rays, Blush in the rose and in the diamond blaze,

We prize the stronger effort of his power, And always set the gem above the flower.

To stake at play.

What sad disorders play begets! Desperate and mad, at length he sets

Those darts, whose points make gods adore.

To offer a wager at dice to another.

Who sets me else? I'll throw at all.

To fix in metal.

Think to cast a treasure as your son Too great for any private man's possession;

And him too rich a jewel to be set In vulgar metal for a vulgar use.

He may learn to cut, polish, and set precious stones.

To embarrass; to distress; to perplex.

[This is used, I think, by mistake, for beset; as,

Adam, hard beset, replied,

Those who raise popular murmurs and discontent against his majesty's government, that they find so very few and so very improper occasions for them, shew how hard they are set in this particular, represent the bill as a grievance.

To fix in an artificial manner, so as to produce a particular effect.

The proud have laid a snare for me, they have set guns.

To apply to something, as a thing to be done.

Unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury, that the Lord may bless thee in all that thou *set*est thine hand to.

With what'er gall thou *set*st thyself to write, Thy insolence satires never bite.

To fix the eyes.

I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and bring them again to this land.

Joy salutes me when I set My black eyes on Amoret.

To offer for a price.

SET

There is not a more wicked thing than a covetous man; for such an one *set*eth his own soul for sale.

To place in order; to frame.

After it was framed, and ready to be set together, he was, with infinite labour and charge, carried by laud with camels through that hot and sandy country.

To station; to place.

Cæsar has betray'd The bitter truths that our loose court upbraid

Your friend was set upon you for a spy, And on his witness you are doom'd to die.

To oppose.

Will you set your wit to a fool's?

To bring to a fine edge; as, to set razor.

To point out, without noise or clamour; as, a dog sets birds.

To set about. To apply to.

They should make them play games, or endeavour it, and set themselves about it.

To set against. To place in a state of enmity or opposition.

The king of Babylon set himself against Jerusalem.

The devil hath reason to set himself against for nothing is more destructive to him than a man armed with prayer.

There should be such a being as assists us against our worst enemies, and comforts us under sharpest sufferings, when all other things set themselves against us.

To set against. To oppose; to place in rhetorical opposition.

This perishing of the world in a deluge against, or compared with, the perishing of the world in the conflagration.

To set apart. To neglect for a season.

They highly commended his forwardness, and other matters for that time set apart.

To set aside. To omit for the present.

Set your knighthood and your soldiery, and give me leave to tell you that you have no throat.

In 1585 followed the prosperous expeditions of Drake and Carle; in the which I set out the taking of St. Jago and St. Domingo, as trophies rather than encounters.

My highest interest is not to be deceived in these matters; therefore, setting aside all considerations, I will endeavour to know the truth and yield to that.

To set aside. To reject.

I'll look into the pretensions of each, and see upon what ground it is that I embrace that of the deluge, and set aside all the rest.

No longer now does my neglected mind Its wonted stores and old ideas find.

Fix'd judgment there no longer does abide, To taste the true, or set the false aside.

To set aside. To abrogate; to annul.

Several innovations, made to the detriment of the English merchant, are now entirely set aside.

There may be

Reasons of so much power and cogency, As may set aside this right of birth

If sons have rights, yet fathers have no law.

He shows what absurdities follow upon such supposition; and the greater those absurdities are, the more strongly do they evince the fallacy of the supposition from whence they flow, and consequently the truth of the doctrine set aside by the supposition.

To set by. To regard; to esteem.

David behav'd himself worse, setting by his name, than he was much set by.

To set by. To reject or omit for the present.

You shall hardly edify me, what they might not, by the law of nature, have been done by any nation that had only policy and moral victory, though the propagation of the faith, whereof we shall speak in the proper place, were fit to be made part of the case.

SET

39. To SET down. To explain, or relate in writing.

They have set down, that a rose set by garlic is better, because the more staid juice goeth into the garlic.

Some tales were to be set down for the government of the army.

The reasons that led me into the meaning which prevailed on my mind, are set down.

An eminent instance of this, to shew what use can be made of it.

I shall set down an account of a discourse I heard to have with one of these rural statesmen.

40. To SET down. To register or note in any book or paper; to put in writing.

Every man, careful of virtuous observation, studies of scripture, and given unto any abstinence in diet, was set down in his calendar of suspected Piousness.

I choose that play your clowns speak no more than is set down for them.

One half of my commission, and set down

As well thou art experienced, since thou know'st thy country's strength and weakness.

I cannot forbear setting down in the beautiful description Claubian has made of a wild beast, newly brought from the woods, and making its first appearance in a full amphitheatre.

41. To SET down. To fix on a resolve.

Finding him to resolutely set down, that he was neither by far nor foul means, but only by force, to be removed out of his town, he inclined the time round.

42. To SET down. To fix; to establish.

This law we may name eternal, being that order which God before all others hath set down with himself, for himself to do all things by.

43. To SET forth. To publish; to promulgate; to make appear.

My willing love,

The rather by these arguments of fear,

Set forth in your pursuit.

The poems, which have been so ill set forth under his name, are as he first writ them.

44. To SET forth. To raise; to send out on expeditions.

Our merchants, to their great charges, set forth fleets to deter the seas.

The Venetian admiral had a fleet of sixty galleys, set forth by the Venetians.

45. To SET forth. To display; to explain; to represent.

As for words to set forth such lewdness, it is not hard for them to give a goodly and painted show therunto, borrowed even from the priests proper to virtue.

Whereas it is commonly set forth green or yellow, it is inclining to white.

So little have these false colours discoloured painting, that they have only served to set forth her praise, and to make her merit further known.

46. To SET forth. To arrange; to place in order.

Up higher to the plain, where we'll set forth in our appointment all our reasons.

47. To SET forth. To show; to exhibit.

To render our reason more monstrous, and what unto a miracle set forth the power of God, he hath endeavoured to make the world believe he was God himself.

To set forth great things by small.

The two humours, of a chaste and true providence, and a suspicious diffidence of it, are very well set forth here for our instruction.

When poor Hiccius spends all his work in hopes of setting one good dinner forth.

This downright wisdom is.

48. To SET forth. To advance; to promote.

Vol. II.

SET

They yield that reading may set forward, but not begin, the work of salvation.

Amongst them there are not those helps which others have, to set them forward in the way of life.

In the external form of religion, such things as are apparently, or can be sufficiently proved, intellectual, and generally fit to set forward godliness, either as by taking the graces of God, or as by becoming the dignity of religion, or as concurring with celestial impressions in the minds of men, may be reverently thought of.

They mark my path, they set forward my calamity.

Dung or chalk, applied feebly to the roots of trees, doth set them forward.

49. To SET in. To put in a way to begin.

If you please to assist and set me in, I will recollect myself.

50. To SET off. To decorate; to recommend; to adorn; to embellish. It answers to the French relever.

Lake bright metal on a fallen ground, My reformation, glittering o'er my fault.

Than that which hath no foil to set it off.

The prince put thee into my service for no other reason than to set me off.

Not least the examples of those that have carried themselves ill in the same place, not to set off thyself by taxing their memory, but to direct thyself what to avoid.

May you be happy, and your sorrows pass Set off those joys I with may ever last.

The figures of the groups must contrast each other by their several positions: thus, in a play, some characters must be raised to oppose others, and to set them off.

The men, whose hearts are aimed at, are the occasion that one part of the face lies under a kind of disguise, while the other is so much set off and adorned by the owner.

Their women are perfect mistresses in showing themselves to the best advantage: they are always gay and sprightly, and set off the worst faces with the best airs.

The general good sense and worthiness of his character, makes his friends observe these little singularities as faults, that rather set off than diminish his good qualities.

The work will never take, if it is not set off with proper scenes.

Claubian sets off his description of the Endians with all the poetical force.

51. To SET on or upon. To animate; to instigate; to incite.

You had either never attempted this change, set on with hope; or you verily did over it, stop with despair.

He upbraids Iago, that he made him have compassion on the wretch, whom he came that I was cut; and even now to make Iago set him on.

Thou, traitor, hadst set on thy wife to this.

Baruch setteth thee on against us, to deliver us unto the Chaldeans.

He should be thought to be set on, and employed by his own or the malice of others, men to abuse the duke.

In opposition to Grim death, my son and too, who set them on.

The vengeance of God, and the indignation of men, will join forces against an insulting but set, when backed with great aids, and set on by information.

The skill used in dressing up power, will serve only to give a greater edge to man's natural ambition: what can this do but set man on the more eagerly to scramble?

A prince's court introduces a kind of history, that sets every particular person upon making a higher figure than is consistent with his revenue.

52. To SET on or upon. This sense may, perhaps, be rather neutral. To attack; to assault.

There you mulling me, I was taken up by pirates who, putting me under board prisoner, presently set upon another ship, and, maintaining a long fight, in the end put down all to the sword.

Callio hath been a set on in the dark: He's almost dead, and Rodrigo dead.

So other toys may set upon our back.

Alphonsus, captain of another of the galleys, suffering his men to struggle too far into the land, was set upon by a Turkish pirate, and taken.

Of one hundred ships there came scarce thirty to work: howbeit with them, and fish as came daily in, we set upon them, and gave them the chase.

If I had been set upon by villainy, I would have redeemed that evil by one which I now suffer.

When once I am set upon, 'twill be too late to be whetting when I should be fighting.

When some rival power made a right, they set on flies, and turtles started fight.

53. To SET on. To employ as in a task. Set on thy wife to observe.

54. To SET on or upon. To fix the attention; to determine to any thing with settled and full resolution.

It becomes a true lover to have your heart more set upon her good than your own, and to bear a tenderer respect to her honour than your satisfaction.

55. To SET out. To assign; to allot.

The rest, unable to serve any longer, or willing to fall to thirt, should be placed in part of the lands by them won, at better rate than others to whom the same shall be set out.

The quarrel of a man's thoughts to the lot that providence has set out for him, is a blessing.

56. To SET out. To publish.

I will cite no other authority than that excellent proclamation set out by the king in the first year of his reign, and annexed before the book of Common Prayer.

It should be set out to the world by an angry man, the consequence must be a contentment of our mind for some months more to his regret.

57. To SET out. To mark by boundaries or distinctions of space.

Time and place, taken thus for determinate portions of those infinite abysses of space and duration, set out, or supposed to be distinguished, from the rest by known boundaries, have each a twofold conception.

58. To SET out. To adorn; to embellish.

An ugly woman, in a rich habit set out with jewels, nothing can become.

59. To SET out. To raise; to equip.

The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten galleasses.

60. To SET out. To show; to display; to recommend.

Barbarossa, in his discourses concerning the conquest of Africa, set him out as a most fit assistance for subduing the kingdom of Tunis.

I could set out that last file of Luther, which our author, in the picture he has given us of him, has thrown into shade, that he might place a supposed deformity more in view.

61. To SET out. To show; to prove.

Those very reasons set out how honourous his was.

62. To SET up. To erect; to establish newly.

There are many excellent institutions of charity lately set up, and which deserve all manner of encouragement, particularly those which relate to the education and instruction of poor children.

63. To SET up. To enable to commence a new business.

Who could not win the mistress, would then set up themselves, and drive a separate trade.

64. To SET up. To build; to erect.

SET

Their ancient habitations they neglect,
And set up now; then, it the echo like
In such a room, they pluck down those.

Jacob took the stone that he had for his pillow,
And set it up for a pillar.

Such delight hath God in men
Obdient to his will, that he vouchsafes
Among them to set up his tabernacle.

Images were not set up or worshipped among the heathens, because they supposed the gods to be like them.

Statues were set up to all those who had made themselves eminent for any noble action.

I shall show you how to set up a forge, and what

Patrons, who seek from living worth to descend, Withhold the pension, and set up the head.

65. To SET up. To raise; to exalt; to put in power.

He was skillful enough to have lived still, if knowledge could be set up against mortality.

I will translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and set up the throne of David over Israel.

Off those that lead these parties, if you could take off the major number, the lesser would govern; only, if you could take off all, they would set up one, and follow him.

Homer took all relations of fitting up his own countrymen, the Grecians, and of undervaluing the Trojan chiefs.

66. To SET up. To establish; to appoint;
to fix.

Whatever practical rule is generally broken, it cannot be supposed innate; it being impossible that men should, without sin or fear, solemnly break a rule which they could not but evidently know that God had set up.

67. To SET up. To place in view.

He hath taken me by my neck, shaken me to pieces, and set me up for his mark.

Scurrows are set up to keep birds from corn and fruit.

Thy father's merit sets thee up to view,
And shows thee in the fairest point of light,
To make thy virtues or thy faults conspicuous.

68. To SET up. To place in repose; to fix; to rest.

Whilst we sit up our hopes here, we do not do seriously, as we ought, consider that God has provided another and better place for us.

69. To SET up. To raise by the voice.

My right eye itches, some good luck is near;
Perhaps my Amaryllis may appear;
I'll set up such a note as she shall hear.

70. To SET up. To advance; to propose to reception.

The authors that set up this opinion were not themselves satisfied with it.

71. To SET up. To raise to a sufficient fortune; to set up a trade; to set up a trader.

In a soldier's life there's honour to be got; and one lucky hit sets up a man for ever.

72. This is one of the words that can hardly be explained otherwise than by various and multiplied exemplification.
It is scarcely to be referred to any radical or primitive notion; it very frequently includes the idea of a change made in the state of the subject, with some degree of continuance in the state superinduced.

To SET. v. n.

1. To fall below the horizon, as the sun at evening.

The sun was set.

Whereas the setting of the pleyades and seven stars is denominated the term of autumn and the beginning of winter, at some latitudes these stars do never set.

That sun once set, a thousand meaner stars
Give a due light to violence and wars.

SET

Now the latter watch of waning night,
And setting stars, to kindly rest invite.

Not thicker billows beat the Lybian main,
When pale Orion sets in wintry rain,
Than stand these troops.

My eyes no object met
But distant shores that in the ocean set.

The Julian eagles here their wings display,
And there like setting stars the Decurion lay.

2. To be fixed hard.

A gathering and setting of the spirits together to resist, maketh the teeth to set hard one against another.

3. To be extinguished or darkened, as the sun at night.

Alvah could not see; for his eyes were set, by reason of his age.

4. To fit music to words.

beholden to him that assures me, that in such a field there is a covey of partridges.

9. To plant, not to sow.

To guard me ne'er this rule forget,
To sow dry, and set wet.

10. It is commonly used in conversation for sit, which, though undoubtedly barbarous, is sometimes found in authors.

If they set down before 's, 'fore they remove Bring up your army.

11. To apply one's self.

If he sets industriously and sincerely to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him.

12. To SET about. To fall to; to begin.

We find it most hard to convince them, that it is necessary now, at this very present, to set about it:
we are thought a little too hot and hasty, when we press wicked men to leave their sins to day, as long as they have so much time before them to do it in.

How preposterous is it, never to set about works of charity, whilst we ourselves can see them performed.

13. To SET in. To become settled in a particular state.

When the weather was set in to be very bad, I have taken a whole day's journey to see a gallery furnished by great masters.

As November set in with keen frosts, so they continued through the whole of that month without any other intermission than freezing with more or less severity, as the winds changed.

A storm accordingly happened the following day;
for a southern monsoon began to set in.

14. To SET on or upon. To begin a march, journey, or enterprise.

SET

Set your charge
To see perform'd the tenor of our word.

tionable whether its activity only set out at our activity, and began not rather in the womb.

17. To SET out. To begin a journey, or course.

At their setting out they must have their commission from the king.

I shall put you in mind where you promised to set out, or begin your first stage.

Me thou think'st not slow,
Who since the morning-hour set out from heaven,
Where God resides, and ere mid-day arriv'd
In Eden.

My soul then mov'd the quicker pace;
Yours first set out, mine reach'd her in the race.

These doctrines, laid down for foundations of science, were called principles, as the beginning from which we must set out, and look no farther backwards.

He that sets out upon weak legs, will not only go farther, but grow stronger too, than one who with firm limbs only sits still.

For these reasons I shall set out for London tomorrow.

Look no more on man in the first stage of his existence, in his setting out for eternity.

The dazzling lustre to abate,
He set not in all his pomp and state,
Clad in the mildest light.

If we slacken our arms, and drop our oars, we shall be hurried back to the place from whence we first set out.

18. To SET out. To begin the world.

He, at his first setting out, threw himself into court.

of infinite advancement, and yet no less capable of total decay.

A man of a clear reputation, though his heart be split, yet he saves his cargo; has something left towards setting up again, and to is in capacity of receiving benefit not only from his own industry, but the friendship of others.

This habit of writing and discouraging was acquired during my apprenticeship in London and a long residence there after I had set up for myself.

21. To SET up. To begin a scheme of life.

Eumenes, one of Alexander's captains, setting up for himself after the death of his master, persuaded his principal officers to lend him great sums, after which they were forced to follow him for their own security.

A severe treatment might tempt them to set up for a republic.

22. To SET up. To profess publicly.

Sowing the watch grows out of fashion with us. Now we set up for sitting in the pit.

Can Polyphemus, or Antiphanes,
Who gorge themselves with man,
Set up to teach humanity, and give
By their eddiple, rules for us to live?

Those who have once made their court to their mistresses without portions, that maids, are never like to set up for fortunes.

It is found by experience, that those men who set up for morality without regard to religion, are generally but vicious in part.

SET

They had their several for heathen nations, their several for the people of their own nation, their several for men, their several for women, their several for their priests, and for the high priests alone their several. Isaac.

4. Enclosed ground.

There was a nobleman that was lean of waist, but immediately after his marriage, he grew plump and fat. One said to him, Your body is doth contrary to other married men; for they a first wax lean, and you wax fat. Sir Walter Re-leigh stood by and said, There is no beast, that you take him from the common, and put him into the several, but will wax fat. Bacon.

SEVERALLY. adv. [from several.] Distinctly; particularly; separately; apart from others.

Consider angels each of them severally in himself, and their law is, All ye his angels praise him, Hooker.

Nature and scripture, both jointly and not severally, either of them, be so complete, that unto contending spirits we need not the knowledge of any thing more than these two may easily turn, sh our minds with.
Hooker.

The apostles could not be confin'd
To those or those, but severally deliv'd
That large commission round the world to blow.

We ought not so much to love likeness as I envy,
I to emulate from the sanest bodies severally the advantages.
Deighton.

Others were so very small and close together, that I could not keep my eye steady on them severally to number them.
Newton.

SEVERALTY. n. f. [from several.] State of separation from the rest.

The posture or advancement of the lady was no third part of the principality of Wales, the duchy of Cornwall, and earldom of Chester, to be set forth in severalty.

SEVERITY. n. f. [severitas, Latin.]

1. Cruel treatment; sharpness of punishment.

I laugh to see your lady sit to school,
To think that you have taught but I don't know how
Who seem to pacify your severity.
Shakespeare.

He shall be the anvil, the hammer, the
With his own hands; he shall rectify law,
And therefore law shall learn him further trust
Than the severity of public power,
Which he sets at naught.
Shakespeare.

Never were so great rebellions expect'd with so little blood, as for the severity of a man of state taken in hand, it was but upon a room of people.
 Bacon.

There is a difference between an ecclesiastical censure and severity; for under a censure we only include excommunication, suspension, and an interdict; but under an ecclesiastical severity every other punishment of the church is intended. And according to some, a censure and a severity is the same.
Hyde.

2. Hardness; power of distressing.

Though nature hath given insects severity to avoid the winter cold, yet its severity does them in out.

Job.

To SEW, v. a. To drain a pond for the fish.
Antworth.

SEWER. n. f. [sewer, French; or sewer, old French, from seuer to let down; for these officers let the ditches on the table. Newton's Milton.

1. An officer who turns up a least.

Marshall's feast,
Sew'd up in hall with sewers and trenchers
The skill of artifice or office mean.
Milton.

The cook and sewer each his tale tells true,
In various figures leaves of diller's rule.
Deighton.

2. [from seuer, seuer.] A passage for water to run through, now corrupted to sewer.
Concell.

The fenmen hold that the sewers must be kept so, as the water may not stay too long in the fens till the weeds and fedge be grown up.
Pacan.

Men suffer their private judgments to be drawn into the common sewer or stream of the present vogue.
King Charles.

As one who long in populous city past,
Where houses thick, and sewers annoy the air,
Forth issuing on a summer's morn'g to breathe
Among the pleasant villages and farms
Adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives delight.
Milton.

An under officer of the church, who bushels is to dig graves.

A stool and cushion for the sexton. Shakespeare.

When any dies, then by tolling a bell, or by sounding a grave of the sexton, the sexton is known to the teachers corresponding with the sexton.
Grant.

SEXTONSHIP. n. f. [from sexton.] The office of a sexton.

They may get a dispensation to hold the election and sextanship of their own parish in commu-dum.
Swift.

SEXTUPLE. adj. [sextuplus, Lat.] Sixfold;
six times told.

Man's length, being a perpendicular from the vertex to the sole of the foot, is sextuple to his breadth, or a right line drawn from the ribs of one knee to another.
Boyle.

To SHAKE, v. n. To play mean tricks. A low barbarous cant word.

SHAMEFULLY. adv. [from shameful.] Shamefully; reproachfully; detestably; punitively. A cant word.

SHAMELESSNESS. n. f. [from shameless.] Meanness; punitiveness.

He exchanged his gay shamelessness of clothes, fit for a much younger man, to worn ones that would be decent for a much older one.
Spenser.

SHARNY. adj. (a word that has crept into conversation and low writing, but ought not to be admitted into the language.]

Mean; paltry.

The dean was to shabby, and look'd like a mimic;
That the captain in pos'd he was curate to Jeremy.

To SHA'CKLE. v. a. [from the noun shackle; schackelen, Dutch.] To chain, to fetter;
to bind.

It is great,
To do that thing that ends all other deeds;
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change.

You must not shackle and tie him up with rules about indifferent matters.

No trial price
Should fet him free, or small should be my praise
To lead him shackled.

So the stretch'd cord the shackled dancer treads,
As prone to fall as impotent to rise.

SHA'CKLES. n. f. wanting the singular.
[scacul, Sax. schackels, Dutch.] Fetters;
gyves; chains for prisoners.

Himself he frees by secret means unseen,
His shackles empty left, himself escaped clean.

A servant commonly is left free in mind than in condition; his very will seems to be in bonds and shackles, and confine itself under duress and captivity.

The forge in fetters only is employ'd;
Our iron mines exulted and decried
In shackles.

SHAD. n. f. [clapca.] A kind of fish.
SHADE. n. f. [scadu, Sax. schade, Dutch.]

1. The cloud or opacity made by interception of the light.

Spring no obstacle found here nor shade,
But all sunshine.

2. Darkness; obscurity.
The weaker light unwillingly declin'd,
And to prevailing shades the murmuring world relign'd.

3. Coolness made by interception of the sun.

Antigonus, when told that the enemy had such volleys of arrows that hid the sun, said, That falls out well; for this is hot weather, and so we shall fight in the shade.

That high mount of God, whence light and shade
Shine both.

4. An obscure place, properly in a grove or close wood, by which the light is excluded.

Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there
Weep our sad fates empty.

Regions of sorrow, doleful shades,
Then to the desert takes his flight;

Where full from shade to shade the Son of God,
After long days fasting, had remain'd.

The pious prince then seeks the shade
Which hides from fight his venerable maid.

5. Screen causing an exclusion of light or heat; umbrage.

Let the arch'd knife,
Well sharpen'd, now itself the spreading shades
Of vegetables, and their dusky limbs deliver.

In Brazil are trees, which kill those that sit under their shade in a few hours.

6. Protection; shelter.

7. The parts of a picture not brightly coloured.

'Tis every painter's art to hide from sight,
And cast in shades, what seen would not delight.

8. A colour; gradation of light.

White, red, yellow, blue, with their several degrees or shades and mixtures, as green, come in only by the eyes.

9. The figure formed upon any surface corresponding to the body by which the light is intercepted; the shadow.

Heavy will merit, as its shade, pursue.

10. The soul separat d from the body; so called, as supposed by the ancients to be perceptible to the sight, not to the touch.

A spirit; a ghost; manes.

To shade in, i. e. as thought, the sitting shade
Thro' an imaginary journey made.

Ne'er to these chambers, where the mighty rest,
Since their foundation came a nobler guest;
Nor e'er was to the bow'rs of bliss convey'd
A later spirit or more welcome shade.

To SHADE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To overspread with opacity.

Thou shad'st
The full blaze of thy beams, and through a cloud thy skirts appear.

2. To cover from the light or heat; to overspread.

A graph six wings wore to shade
His lineaments divine.

And, after these, came arm'd with spear and shield

An host to great as cover'd all the field;
And all their torches, like the knights before,
With laurels ever green was shaded o'er.

I went to crop the shades of trees,
And shade out altars with their leafy greens.

Sing, while beside the shaded tomb I mourn,
And with tears bays her rural shrine adorn.

3. To shelter; to hide.

Ere in our own house I do shade my head,
The good patriots must be visited.

4. To protect; to cover; to screen.

Leave not the faithful side
That gave thee being, still shades thee and protects

5. To mark with different gradations of colours.

The portal shone, inimitable on earth
By model, or by shading pencil drawn.

6. To paint in obscure colours.

SHA'DINESS. n. f. [from shady.] The state of being shady; umbrageousness.

SHA'DOW. n. f. [scadu, Saxon; schaduw,
Dutch.]

1. The representation of a body by which the light is intercepted.

Poor Tom! proud at heart, to ride over four-inch'd bridges, to come his own shadow for a trout.

Luc's but a walking shadow, a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more.

Such a nature,
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which he treads on at noon.

The body, though it moves, yet not changing perceptible distance with some other bodies, the thing seems to stand still, as in the hands of clocks, and shades of lunatics.

2. Opacity; darkness; shade.

By the revolution of the skies
Night's shade shadows from the ocean rise.

His countrymen probably lived within the shade of the earthquake, and shadow of the eclipse.

3. Shelter made by any thing that intercepts the light, heat, or influence of the air.

In secret shadow from the sunny ray,
On a sweet bed of his sister's laid.

Here, father, take the shadow of this tree,
For your good holt.

4. Obscure place.

To the secret shadows I retire,
To pay my penance till my years expire.

5. Dark part of a picture.

A shadow is the diminution of the first and second light. The first light is that which proceeds immediately from a lightened body, as the beams of the sun. The second is an accidental light, spreading itself into the air, or medium, proceeding from the other. Shadows are threefold: the first is a single shadow, and the least of all; and is proper to the plain surface where it is not wholly possessed of the light. The second is the double shadow, and is used when the surface begins not to be seen your eye, as in columns. The third shadow is made by crossing over your double shadow, and which darkens by a third part. It is used in the most shadows, and farthest from the light, in gulfs, wells, and caves.

After great lights there must be great shadows.

6. Any thing perceptible only to the sight;
a ghost; a spirit, or shade.

Hence, horrible shadow!
Unreal mockery hence!

7. An imperfect and faint representation opposed to substance.

In the glorious lights of heaven we perceive shadow of his divine countenance.

It substance might be call'd that shadow from Without the least impulse or shadow of fate

Amongst the creatures are particular excellencies scattered, which are some shadows of the divine perfections.

And bear't before him; then by shall we carry
The number of our host, and make discovery
Far in report of us.

5. To protect; to screen from danger, in throud.

God shall forgive you Cœur de Lion's death
The rather, that you give his offspring life,
Shadowing their right under your wings.

6. To mark with various gradations of colour, or light.

Tuneful is made of old linen rag'd and dand in a saucer of vinegar, and set over a charge of coals till it boil, then wing it into a net put it into a little gun snabick: it is good for carnations, and all yellows.

From a round globe of any uniform colour, a idea imprinted on our minds of a shadow variously shadowed with different degrees of coming to our eyes.

More broken scene, made up of an infinite variety of inequalities and shadowings, that nature wile from an agreeable mixture of hills, trees, and valleys.

7. To paint in obscure colours.

If the parts be too much distant, so that there be void spaces which are deeply shadowed in, they in those voids some fold, to make a joining of the parts.

8. To represent imperfectly.

Whereat I wak'd, and found
Before mine eyes all real, as the dream
Had lively shadow'd. Milton.
Augustus is shadowed in the person of Æneas.
Dryden.

I have shadowed some part of your virtues under another name. Dryden.

To represent typically.

Many times there are three things said to make up the substance of a sacrament: namely, the grace which is thereby offered, the element which conduces to it, and the word which certifies what is done by the element. Hooker.

The word being to defend the body from wearing, apply shadows out to us the continuance of the element, which made him proof to all the attacks of pleasure. Addison.

More pleasant light
Shadowy sets off the face of things. Milton.

3. Faintly representative; typical.

When they see
I can discover sin, but not remove See by those shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats; they may conclude
Some blood more precious must be paid for man. Milton.

4. Unsubstantial; unreal.

Milton has brought into his poems two actors of a shadowy and fictitious nature, in the persons of Adam and Eve; by which he hath interwoven in his tale a very beautiful allegory. Addison.

5. Dark; opaque.

By command, ere yet dim night
Her shadowy cloud withdraws, I am to haste Homeward. Milton.

SHADY. adj. [from shade.]

1. Full of shade; mildly gloomy.

The wakened bird Sings darkling, and in shadowy covert had her nocturnal note. Milton.

Stretch'd at ease you sing your happy loves,
And Amalthis fills the shady groves.

My parents train'd, the Tartars wild are taught,
Arch shafts shot out from their back-turned bow. Sidney.

Who, in the spring, from the new sun
The day has a fever got,
To late begins their shafts to fling.
Which Phoebus thro' his veins has shot. Waller.

They are both the archer and shaft taking aim at each other, and then shooting themselves directly upon the desired mark. More.

My arrow was the pile, a Parthian bow
And vigour drawn must send the shaft below. Dryden.

[shaft, Dutch.] A narrow, deep, perpendicular pit.

They hark a shaft or pit of six foot in length.

The following dump, upon its ascent, gives a shock like the report of a gun, and makes an explosion so forcible as to kill the miners, and to reduce to great weight from the bottom of the pit through the shaft. Woodward.

Fail onen, like a shag hard' crafty kern,
Hath he converted with the enemy.
And given me notice of their villanies. Shakespeare.
Where is your husband?
He's a traitor.

--- Thou lyest, thou shag-eared villain! Shakespeare.

From the shag of his body, the shape of his legs,
his having little or no tail, the downiness of his coat, and his climbing up of trees, he seems to come near the bear kind. Cerv.

True Wincey broad cloth, with its shag under it, is the horseman's choice. Cerv.

2. A kind of cloth.

SHAG. n. f. [phalacrocorax, Lat.] A sea bird.

They change their hue, with haggard eyes they stare, Dryden.

Lenn are their looks, and shaggy is their hair.

A lion's hole he wears;
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin,
The teeth and gaping jaws severely grim. Dryden.
From the frothy north
The early valiant Swede draws forth his wags,
In battalions array, while Volga's stream
Sends opposite, in shaggy arms, a cloud,
Her bold rears, on mutual slaughter bent. Philips.

2. Rough; rugged.

They pluck'd the feated hills with all their load,
Rocks, waters, woods, and by the shaggy tops
Uplifting, bore them in their hands. Milton.

There, where every delation dwells,
Py grot and caverns shaggy'd with hoar shades,
She may play on with unblinded melody.

Be it not done in pride. Milton.

Through Eden went a river large,
Nor chang'd his course, but through the shaggy hull

Pas'd underneath unguish'd. Milton.

How would the old king smile
To see you weigh the paw when that with old,
And throw the shaggy flocks about your shoulders

Ye rugged rocks! which hold the shaggy
Ye grot and caverns shaggy'd with hoar shades.

SHAGREEN. n. f. [chagrin, Fr.] The skin

To shake off all mortality? Waller.

I am I received to be answered by himself, after I had shaken off the lesser and more barking creatures. St. Augustine.

Can I want courage for to have a deed
I've shook it off my breast from hence. Dryden.

Here we are free from the to-morrow's custom and respect: we may shake off the heavy imposition. Collier.

How does thy beauty lasteth
The face of war, and make even his our smile!

At sight of thee my heart shakes off its terrors. Addison.

To SHAKE. v. n.

1. To be agitated with a vibratory motion.

It was counted as stable: he agitated at the nature of a point. See.

2. To totter.

Under his burning wheels
The fleetest chariot on shook throughout,
And put the throne itself in doubt. Milton.

3. To tremble; to be unable to keep the body still.

S H A

Thy light, which should Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts,
Constrains them weep, and shakes with fear and sorrow.

What said the wench, when he rose up again?
--Trembled and shook; for why, he stamp'd,
As if the vicar meant to censure him. Shakespeare.
A shaking through their limbs they find,
Like leaves saluted by the wind. Waller.

4. To be in terror; to be deprived of firmness.

He, short of succours, and in deep despair,
Shook at the dismal prospect of the war. Dryden.

SHAKE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Concussion suffered.

If that thy fame with every toy be pos'd,
'Tis a thin web, which poisonous fancies make;
But the great soldier's honour was compos'd
Of thicker stuff which could endure a shake:
Wisdom picks friends; civility plays the rest.
A toy, shunn'd cleanly, passeth with thee best.

Herbert.

2. Impulse; moving power.

The freeholder is the basis of all other titles:
this is the substantial flock, without which they are no more than blossoms, that would fall away with every shake of wind. Addison.

3. Vibratory motion.

Several of his countrymen probably lived within the shake of the earthquake, and the shadow of the eclipse, which are recorded by this author. Addison.

4. Motion given and received.

Our salutations were very hearty on both sides, consisting of many kind shakes of the hand. Addison.

SHAKER. n. f. [from shake.] The person or thing that shakes.

Go, then, the guilty at thy will chastise,
He said; the shaker of the earth replies. Pope.

SHALE. n. f. [corrupted, I think, for shell.]
A husk; the rale of seeds in siliqueous plants.

Behold you poor and starv'd band,
And your fair flesh shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.

Shakespeare.

SHALL. v. defective. [from shall, Sax. is originally I owe, or I ought. In Chaucer, the faith I shall to God, means the faith I owe to God: thence it became a sign of the future tense. The French use devon, dois, doit, in the same manner, with a kind of future signification; and the Swedes have skal, and the Islanders skal, in the same sense. It has no tenses but shall future, and should imperfect.

The explanation of shall, which foreigners and provincials confound with will, is not easy; and the difficulty is increased by the poets, who sometimes give to shall an emphatical sense of will:
but I shall endeavour, craspi Minerda, to show the meaning of shall in the future tense.]

1. I SHALL love. It will so be that I must love; I am resolv'd to love.

2. SHALL I love? Will it be permitted me to love? Will you permit me to love?
Will it be that I must love?

3. Thou SHALT love. I command thee to love; it is permitted thee to love; [in poetry or solemn diction] it will be that thou must love.

4. SHALT thou love? Will it be that thou must love? Will it be permitted to thee to love?

5. He SHALL love. It will be that he must love; it is commanded him that he love.

It is a mind, that shall remain.

—Shall remain!

Hear you this triton of the minnows? Mark you his absolute shall? Shakespeare.

See Romulus the great:

This prince a prefects of your blood shall bear;
And, like his fire, in arms he shall appear.

Dryden.

That he shall receive no benefit from Christ, is the affirmation whereon all his despair is founded;
and the one way of removing this dismal apprehension, is to convince him that Christ's death, and the benefits thereof, either do, or, if he perform the condition required of him, shall certainly belong to him. Hammond.

6. SHALL he love? Is it permitted him to love? [in solemn language] Will it be that he must love?

7. The plural persons follow the signification of the singulars.

In blue shalloon shall Hamnibal be clad,
And Scipio trail an Irish purple plaid. Swift.

SHALLOP. n. f. [chaloupe, Fr.] A small boat.

You were resolv'd, after your arrival into Oro-noque, to pass to the mine; and, to that end, you desir'd to have Mr John Fearnie's shallop: I do not allow of that course, because you cannot land to secretly but that some Indians on the river side may discover you, who giving knowledge of your passage to the Spaniards, you may be cut off before you can recover your boat. Raleigh.

In a small shallop, fortune in his debt. Waller.

SHALLOW. adj. [This word is probably compounded of shal and low.]

1. Not deep; having the bottom at no great distance from the surface or edge.

I had been drown'd, but that the shore was shelvy
and shallow; a death that I abhor. Shakespeare.

That inundation, though it were shallow, had a long continuance, whereby they of the vale, that were not drown'd, perished for want of food. Bacon.

The like opinion he held of Mentis Palus, that by the floods of Tanais, and earth brought down thereby, it grew observably shallow in his days,
and would in process of time become a firm land.

Brown.

I am made a shallow forded stream,
Seen to the bottom: all my clearness is torn'd,
And all my faults expos'd. Dryden.

Shallow brooks, that flow'd so clear,
The bottom did the top appear. Dryden.

In shallow furrows vines securely grow. Dryden.

2. Not intellectually deep; not profound;
not very knowing or wise; empty;
trifling; futile; silly.

I'll shew my mind,
According to my shallow simple skull. Shakespeare.

This is a very shallow monster:
Atrach of him? A very shallow monster,
The man of the moon! A most poor credulous monster. Shakespeare.

The king was neither so shallow nor so ill advised as not to perceive the intention of the French king, for the invading himself of Britaine.

Bacon.

Uncertain and unsettled he remains,
Deep vext in books, and shallow in himself.

Milton.

One would no more wonder to see the most shallow nation of Europe the most vain, than to find the most empty fellows in every nation more con-cited than the rest. Addison.

3. Not deep of sound.

If a virginal were made with a double concave, the one all the length of the virginal, and the other at the end of the strings, as the harp hath, it must make the sound perfecter, and not so shallow and jarr'd. Bacon.

SHALLOW. n. f. [from the adjective.] A

S H A

shelf; a sand; a flat; a shoal; a place where the water is not deep.

I should not see the faddly hour glass run,
But I should note of shallows end of flats;
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Veiling her high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial. Shakespeare.

A swift stream is not heard in the channel, but upon shallows of gravel. Bacon.

Having but newly left those grammatical flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction, and now on the sudden transported, to be told with their unballasted wits in fathomless and re-quiet deeps of controversy, they do grow into hatred of learning. Milton.

You that so oft have founded And fathom'd all his thoughts, that know the deeps

And shallows of his heart, should need no instruction. Deham.

To advance your ends. Dryden.

He sounds and fathoms him, to find
The shallows of his soul. Dryden.

The wary Dutch
Behind their treach'rous shallows now withdraw,
And there lay snare to catch the British host. Dry.

Three more fierce Enarus in his angry mood
Dash'd on the shallows of the moving land,
And in mid ocean left them moor'd a-land. Dry.

In arms of the sea, and among islands, there is no great depth, and some places are plain shallows.

Burnet.

Their spawn being lighter than the water, there it would not sink to the bottom, but be buoyed up by it, and carried away to the shallows. Ry.

With the use of diligence, and prudent conduct,
he may decline both rocks and shallows. Norris.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world, and must we now have an ocean of more flats and shallows, in the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.

SHALLOWBRAINED. adj. [shallow and brain.] Foolish; futile; trifling; empty.

It cannot but be matter of just indignation to all good men, to see a company of lewd-shallow brained huffs making atheism, and contempt of religion, the sole badge of wit. Swift.

SHALLOWLY. adv. [from shallow.]

1. With no great depth.

The load hath open on the grass, or but shallowly covered. Carr.

2. Simply; foolishly.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence.
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.

Shakespeare.

SHALLOWNESS. n. f. [from shallow.]

1. Want of depth.

2. Want of thought; want of understanding; futility; illiness; emptiness.

By it do all things have their measur'd hour,
We cannot ask the thing which is not there.

Blaming the *shallow*ness of our respect. Becket.

I cannot wonder enough at the *shallow*ness and impertinent zeal of the vulgar but in Dionysius were carried away with such an ignorant devotion for his success, when it little came and their honor or security. Plut.

SHALM. n. f. [German.] A kind of musical pipe.

Every captain was commanded to have his diers in readiness to set forward upon the shalm, which was by the sound of a shalm or horn.

And.

cheat.]

1. To trick; to cheat; to fool with a fraud; to delude with false pretences.

A low word.

Men tender in point of honour, and yet with little regard to truth, are sooner wrought upon by flattery than by conscience, when they find themselves fooled and shammed into a conviction.

LeTongre.

Then all your wits that fear and shame,
Down from Don Quixote to Tom Tram,
From whom I jests and puns purloin,
And duly put them off for mine,
Fond to be thought a country wit.

Prior.

1. To obtrude by fraud or folly.

We must have a care that we do not, for want of laying things and things together, sham fallacies upon the world for current reason.

L'Estrange.

SHAM. n. f. [from the verb.] Fraud; trick; delusion; false pretence; imposture. A low word.

No sham to grofs but it will pass upon a weak man, that is pragmatism and inquisitive.

L'Estrange.

It goes a great way when natural curiosity and eager prejudice shall be assisted with the shams of allegory and judgments.

L'Estrange.

He that has brought the sham, wheedle, or bunter in use, put together, as he thought fit, those as he made it stand for.

Locke.

That in the sacred temple needs would try Without a fire, the unheated guns to try,
Believe who will the solemn sham, not I. Addison.

SHAM. adj. False; counterfeit; fictitious; pretended.

Where the sham quarrel interrupts the way. Gay.

SHAMBLE. n. f. [of uncertain etymol-ogy; sciannaglia, Italian.]

1. The place where butchers kill or sell their meat; a butchery.

Far be the thoughts of this from Henry's heart,
To make a shambles of the parliament-house.

Shakespeare.

I hope my noble lord esteems me honest.

Oh, ay, as summer flies are in the shambles,
That quicken even with blowing.

Shakespeare.

We warned a flock of sheep, that were driving to me shambles, of their danger; and, upon uttering these sounds, they all fled.

Arbutnot.

2. It is here improperly used.

When the person is made the jest of the mob, or his lack the shambles of the executioner, there is no one conviction in the one than in the other.

Watts.

SHAMBLING. adj. [See SCAMBLING.]

Moving awkwardly and irregularly. A low bad word.

By that shambling in his walk, it should be my rich banker, Gomez, whom I knew at Barcelona.

Dryden.

So when nurse Nokes to set young Ammon tries,
With shambling legs, long chin, and foolish eyes,
With dangling hands he strokes the imperial robe,
And with a cuckold's air commands the globe.

Smith.

Dutch.]

1. The passion felt when reputation is supposed to be lost; the passion expressed sometimes by blushes.

Lamenting sorrow did in darkness lie,
And shame his ugly face did hide from living eye.

Spenser.

Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.
-Give neither charity nor shame to me:
I can hardly with me have you dear,
And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd;
My charity outrages, like my shame;
And in my shame tall lives my sorrow's rage.

Shakespeare.

Hide, for shame,
Romans, your gaudy images,
That blush at their degenerate progeny.

Dryden.

In the schools men are allowed, without shame, to deny the agreement of ideas; or out of the schools, from the new have learned, without shame, to deny the connection of ideas.

Locke.

2. The cause or reason of shame; disgrace;
ignominy.

The more shame for him that he sends it me;
For I have heard him say, a thousand times,
His Julia gave it him at his departure.

Shakespeare.

God deliver the world from such guides, who are the shame of religion.

South.

This jest was first of th' other house's making.
And, five times tried, has never fail'd of taking.

For 'twere a shame a poet should be kill'd,
Under the shelter of so broad a shield.

Dryden.

O shame to manhood! I shall one daring boy
The scheme of all our happiness destroy?

Pope.

And I've power to shame him hence:

Oh, while you live, tell truth and shame the devil.

Shakespeare.

Hyperbolus by suffering did traduce
The ostracism, and sham'd it out of use.

Cleaveland.

Depriv'd
Of all our good, sham'd, naked, miserable.

Milton.

What hurt can there be in all the slanders and disgraces of this world, if they are but the arts and methods of providence, to shame us into the glories of the next?

South.

Were there but one righteous man in the world, he would hold up his head with confidence and honour; he would shame the world, and not the world him.

South.

He, in a loathsome dungeon doom'd to lie,
In bonds retain'd his birthright liberty,
And sham'd oppression, till it let him free.

Dryden.

3. [coutes, French; echoten, Dutch.] In a ship are ropes bent to the clews of the sails, which serve in all the lower sails to hale or ground off the clew of the sail;
but in topsails they draw the sail close to the yard-arms. Dict.—Dryden seems to understand it otherwise.

The little word behind the back, and undoing wafter, like pulling off a sheet-rope at sea, flutters the sail. Sachling.

Fiene Boreas drove against his flying sails,
And rent the sheets. Dryden.

4. As much paper as is made in one body.

As much love in rhyme
As could be cram'd up in a sheet of paper,
Writ on both sides the leaf, margin and all. Shut lip.

Long infamous for ships and sailors' loss,
And white with bones. Dryden.

2. I know not well the meaning in this passage; perhaps rocky.

The allside fields are in some places so tough, that the plough will scarcely cut them; and in some to shelly, that the corn hath much ado to fatten its roots. Carew.

SHELL. n. f. [rēyll, rēall, Sax. schale, schelle, Dutch.]

1. The hard covering of any thing; the external crust.

The sun is as the fire, and the exterior earth is as the shell of the cologne, and the abyss as the water within it, now when the heat of the sun had pierced through the shell and reached the waters, it rarefied them. Burnet.

Whatever we fetch from under ground is only what is lodged in the shell of the earth. Locke.

2. The covering of a testaceous or crustaceous animal.

Her women wear
The spoils of nations in an ear;
Chang'd for the treasure of a shell,
And in their loose attires do swell. Ben Jonson.

Was to Neptune recommended;
Peace and plenty spread the sails;
Venus, in her shell before him,
From the sands in safety bore him. Dryden.

the shell served as moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated, and afterwards freed from its investient shell, is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell. Woodward.

He whom ungrateful Athens could expel,
At all time put but when he sign'd the shell. Pope.

3. The covering of the seeds of aqueous plants.

Some fruits are contained within a hard shell, being the seeds of the plants. Arbuthnot.

The ocean rolling, and the shelly shore,
Beautiful objects, if all daylight no more. Prior.

2. Consisting of shells.

The conceit of Anaximander was, that the first men, and all animals, were bred in some warm monture, inclosed in crustaceous skins, as lobsters; and so continued, till their shelly prisons growing dry, and breaking, made way for them. Bentley.

SHEETER. n. f. [Of this word the etymology is unknown: Shinner deduces it from shell; Darwin from rēyb, a shield, Saxon.]

1. A cover from any external injury or violence.

We hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no sheet to avoid the storm. Shakespeare.

They with the mountains now might be again Thrown on them, as a sheet from his eye. Milton.

Heroes of old, when wounded, *sheet*er sought;
But he, who meets all dangers with disdain,
Even in their face his ship to anchor brought,
And reeple high flood prop upon the main. Dryden.

They may learn experience, and avoid a cave as the worst *sheet*er from rain, when they have a lover in company. Dryden.

And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move,
To live with thee and be thy love. Raleigh.

3. One who tends the congregation; a pastor.

Lead up all those who heard thee, and below'd;
Mild thy own flock, great shepherd, be receiv'd,
And glad all leave'n with millions thou hast sav'd. Pope.

SHEPHERDESS. n. f. [from shepherd.]
A woman that tends sheep; a rural lad.

She put herself into the garb of a shepherdess, and in that disguise lived many years, but discovering herself a little before her death, did protest herself the happiest person alive, not for her condition, but in enjoying him she first loved; and that she would rather, ten thousand times, live a shepherdess in contentment and satisfaction. Sidney.

These your unusual weeds to each part of you
Do give a life: no shepherdess, but Flora Peering in April's front. Shakespeare.

See like some shepherdess did show,
Who sat to bathe her by a river's side. Dryden.

His doct' dialect has incomparable sweetness in its clownishness, like a fair shepherdess in country rustic. Dryden.

her match for beauty, in her shepherdish attire. Sidney.

She saw walking from her ward a man in shepherdish apparel. Sidney.

SHEPHERF. n. f. [sharbat, Arabick.] The juice of lemons or oranges mixed with water and sugar.

They prefer our beer above all other drinks, and considering that water is with the rarest, especially in this climate, the dearest of shepherfs, and plenty of barley, it would prove infinitely profitable to such as should bring in the use thereof. Sandys.

SHERD. n. f. [reap, Sax.] A fragment of broken earthen ware. See SHARD.

The trivet-table of a foot was lame,
She thrusts beneath the limping leg a sherd. Dryden.

SHERIFF. n. f. [grexe gepefa, Sax. from scrype, a hire, and peve, a steward. It is sometimes pronounced shrieve, which some poets have injudiciously adopted.]
An officer to whom is entrusted, in each county, the execution of the laws.
A great power of English and of Scots
Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrown. Shakespeare.

Concerning ministers of justice, the high sheriffs of the counties have been very ancient in this kingdom. Bacon.

reannexing of them to the sheriffwick; privileged officers being no less an interruption of justice than privileged places. Bacon.

SHERRIS. n. f. [from Xeres, a town of Andalusia in Spain.]
A kind of sweet Spanish wine.

Your sherries warm the blood, which, before cold and settled, left the liver white, which is the badge of pusillanimity; but the sherries makes it count from the inwards to the parts extreme. Shakespeare.

Good sherries jack attends me into the ban, dries me there all the foolish dull vapours, and makes it apprehensive. Shakespeare.

SHEW. See SHOW.

SHIDE. n. f. [from reaban, to divide,
Saxon.] A board; a cutting. Skinner.

SHIELD. n. f. [scylb, Saxon.]

armour held on the left arm to ward off blows.

Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more proof than shields. Shakespeare.

His pond'rous shield,
Ethereal temper, massy, large, and round,
Behold him cast; the broad circumference Hung on his shoulders like the moon. Milton.

2. Defence; protection.

3. One that gives protection or security.

The terror of the Trojan field,
The Grecian honour, ornament, and shield,
High on the pile th' unconquer'd chief is plac'd. Dryden.

To SHIELD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a shield.

2. To defend; to protect; to secure.

Were 't my fitness
To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They're apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones: how'er a woman's shape
Doth shield thee. Shakespeare.

Shouts of applause ran ringing through the field,
To see the son the vanquish'd father shield. Dryden.

Heard one that comes to shield his injur'd honour, and guard his life with hazard of her own. Shakespeare.

3. To keep off; to defend against.

Out of their cold caves and frozen habitations into the sweet soil of Europe, they brought with them their usual weeds, fit to shield the cold which they had been injured. Spenser.

My lord I must entreat the time alone.
—God shield I should disturb devotion. Shakespeare.

To SHIFT. v. n. [Of this word the original is obscure; skipta, Runick, is to change.]

1. To change place.

Vegetables being fixed to the same place, and not able to shift and seek out after proper matter for their nutriment, it was necessary that it should be brought to them. Bacon.

2. To change; to give place to other things.

If the ideas of our minds constantly change and shift, in a continual succession, it would be impossible for a man to think long of any one thing. Locke.

3. To change clothes, particularly the linen.

She begs you just would turn you while she shifts
her linen. Locke.

4. To find some expedient; to act or live though with difficulty.

We cannot shift: being in, we must go on.
Men in distress will look to themselves, and leave their companions to shift as well as they can. Locke.

Since we desire no recompence nor thanks, we ought to be dismissed, and have leave to shift for ourselves. Swift.

5. To practise indirect methods.

All those schoolmen, though they were exceeding witty, yet better teach all their followers to shift than to resolve by their distinctions. Raleigh.

6. To take some method for safety.

Nature instructs every creature how to shift for itself in cases of danger. L'Estrange.

To SHIFT, v. a.

1. To change; to alter.

It was not levity, but absolute necessity, that made the fish shift their condition. L'Estrange.

Come, attend me, muse obedient;

Let us try some new expedient,
Shift the scene for half an hour,
Time and place are in thy power. Swift.

2. To transfer from place to place.

Peculation between the two St. Mary's days,
Or let or go, shift it that knowest the ways. Tupper.

3. To put by some expedient out of the way.

I shifted him away,
And laid good excuses on your ecstasy. Shakespeare.
The wisdom of all these latter times, in prudences affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, when they are near, than bold and grounded courtes to keep them aloof. Bacon.

4. To change in position.

Neither use they sails, nor place their oars in order upon the sides; but carrying the war loose, shift it hither and thither at pleasure. Raleigh.

Where the wind
Veers off, as oft the ficers and shifts her sail. Milton.

We strive in vain against the seas and wind,
Now shift your sails. Dryden.

5. To change, as clothes.

I would advise you to shift a suit: the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice. Shakespeare.

6. To dress in fresh clothes.

As it were to ride day and night, and not to have patience to shift me. Shakespeare.

7. To SHIFT off. To defer; to put away by some expedient.

The most beautiful parts must be the most faded; the colours and words most chosen, many things in both, which are not deferving of this case, must be shifted off, content with vulgar expression. Druiden.

Struggle and continue as you will, and lay your taxes as you please, the traders will shift it off from their own gam. Locke.

By various illusions of the devil they are prevailed on to shift off the duties, and neglect the conditions, on which salvation is promised. Rogers.

SHIFT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Expedient found or used with difficulty; difficult means.

She redoubling her blows, drave the stranger to no other shift than to ward and go back; at that time seeming the image of innocency against violence. Sulney.

If I get down, and do not break my limbs,
I'll find a thousand shifts to get away. Shakespeare.

This perfect artifice and accuracy might have been omitted, and yet they have made shift to move up and down in the water. Mure.

Not any boast of skill, but extreme shift
How to regain my fever'd company,
Compell'd me to awake the courteous echo.

To give me answer from her mimic's couch. Milton.

A fashionable hypocrisy shall be called good manners, so we make a shift somewhat to legiti-mate the abuse. L'Estrange.

Those little animals provide themselves with what, but they can make shift without it. Addison.

Our heralds are sufficiently stored with photographs, and we have made a tolerable shift to reduce them to class. Baker.

2. Indirect expedient; mean refuge; last resource.

Vol. II.

The very custom of seeking for particular aid and relief at the hands of God, doth, by a secret contradiction, withdraw them from endeavouring to help themselves, even by those wicked shifts, which they know can never have any allowance whole assistance their prayers seek. Hooker.

To say, where the notions cannot fully be reconciled, that there wanteth a term, is but a shift of ignorance. Bacon.

Slow to resolve, but in performance quick;
So true, that he was awkward at a trick;
For little souls on little shifts rely. Dryden.

3. Fraud; artifice; stratagem.

Know ye not Ulysses' shifts?
Their swords his danger carry than their gifts. Denham.

4. Evasion; alusory practice.

As long as wit, by whetting itself, is able to find out any shift, he it never to flight, whereby to escape out of the hands of prelate contradiction, they are never at a stand. Hooker.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are to cautious and wily-headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilities and fly shifts. Spenser.

Here you see your commission, this is your duty, these are your discomulgations; never seek for shifts and evasions from worldly afflictions:
this is your reward, if you perform it; this your doom, if you decline it. South.

5. A woman's under linen.

SHIFTER, n. f. [from shift.] One who plays tricks; a man of artifice.

'Twas such a shifter, that, if truth were known,
Death was half glad when he had got him down. Milton.

SHIFTLESS, adj. [from shift.] Wanting expedients; wanting means to act on live.

For the poor shiftless irrationals, it is a prodigious act of the great Creator's indulgence, that they are all ready furnished with such clothing. Dehnam.

SHILLING, n. f. [scylling, Sax. and Erse; schilling, Dutch.] A coin of various value in different times. It is now twelve pence.

Five of these pence made then shilling, which they called schilling, probably from schilling, which the Romans used for the fourth part of an ounce, and forty-eight of these schillings made the pound, and four hundred of these pounds were a legacy for a king's daughter, as appeareth by the last will of king Alfred. Camden.

The very shilling may at one time pay twenty men in twenty days, and at another rest in the same hands one hundred days. Locke.

Who, with much pains exerting all his sense,
Can range a right his shillings, pounds, and pence. Young.

SHILL-I-SHALL-I. A corrupt reduplication of shall I? The question of a man hesitating. To stand shill-I-shall-I, is to continue hesitating and procrastinatating.

I am somewhat dainty in making a resolution, because when I make it, I keep it. I don't stand shill-I-shall-I then, if I say 't, I'll do 't. Congreve.

SHILLY, adv. [from shy.] Not familiarly;
not frankly.

SHIN, n. f. [scina, Sax. schien, German.]
The forepart of the leg.

I brushed my shin the other day with playing at sword and dagger. Shakespeare.

The shin bone, from the knee to the instep, is made by shadowing one half of the leg with a single shadow. Peuchant.

His leg, then broke,
Had got a deputy of oak;
For when a shin in fight is cropt,
The knee with one of timber's prop. Hudibras.

As when to an house we come,
To know if any one's at home,
We knock; so one must kick your shin,
Ere he can find your soul's within. Anonymous.

To SHINE, v. a. preterit I shone, I have shone; sometimes I shined, I have shined.
[scinan, Sax. schijnen, Dutch.]

1. To have bright resplendence; to gladden; to gleam.

To-day the French,
All obsequant, all in gold, like heathen gods,
Shone down the English; and to-morrow
Made Britain Lodia: every man that stood Shew'd like a mine. Shakespeare.

True paradise enclos'd with shining rock. Milton.

We can dismiss them ere the morning shine. Milton.

Fair daughter, blow away these mists and clouds,
And let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre. Denham.

The sun shines when he sees it. Locke.

2. To be without clouds.

The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakespeare.

How bright and goodly shines the moon!
The moon! the sun: it is not moonlight now. Shakespeare.

Clear pools greatly comfort the eyes, when the sun is overcast, or when the moon shineth. Bacon.

3. To be glossy.

They are waxen fat, they shine. Jeremiah.

Fish with their fins and shining scales. Milton.

The colour and shining of bodies is nothing but the different arrangement and refraction of their minute parts. Locke.

4. To be gay; to be splendid.

So proud the shined in her princely suite,
Looking to heaven, for earth she did disdain,
And sitting high. Fairy Queen.

The tree at once both upwards shoots,

And just as much grows downward to the roots.

Cleaveland.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,

Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees.

Dryd.

Nor will the wither'd stock be green again,

But the wild olive shoots, and shades the ungrateful plain.

Dryden.

New creatures rise,

A moving mass at first, and short of thighs;

Till shooting out with legs, and unaid with wings.

Dryden.

S H O

The corn laid up by ants would shoot under ground, if they did not bite off all the buds; and therefore it will produce nothing.

A wild where weeds and flow'rs promiscuous set, Or garden tempting with forbidden fruit.

Addison.

3. To form itself into any shape, by emissions from a radical particle.

If the menstrum be overcharged, metals will shoot into crystals.

Bacon.

That rude mass will shoot itself into several forms, till it make an habitable world: the steady hand of providence being the invisible guide of all its motions.

Bacon.

Express'd juices of plants, boiled into the essence of a syrup, and set into a cool place, the ideal salt will shoot upon the sides of the vessels.

Abbot.

4. To be emitted.

There shot a flaming lamp along the sky, Which on the winged lightning seem'd to fly.

Dr. d.

Tell them that the rays of light shoot from the sun to our earth at the rate of one hundred and eighty thousand miles in the second of a minute, they stand aghast at such talk.

Watts.

The grand ethereal bow

Shoots up moments.

Thomson.

5. To protuberate; to jet out.

The land did shoot out with a very great promontory, bending that way.

Abbot.

This valley of the Tirol lies enclosed on all sides by the Alps, though its dominions shoot out into several branches among the breaks of the mountains.

Addison.

6. To push as an arrow.

My words shoot thro' my heart, Melt my resolves, and turn me all to love.

Addison.

7. To become any thing by sudden growth.

Materials dark and crude, Of spiritous fiery fume, till touch'd

With heaven's ray, and temper'd, they shoot forth

So beautiful, opening to the ambient light.

Milton.

Let me but live to shadow this young plant

From bites and storms: he'll soon shoot up here.

Dryden.

8. To move swiftly along.

A shooting star in autumn thwarts the night.

To smoother flight, and shoots upon her wings.

Dryden.

The broken are loud whistling as she flies,

She stops and listens, and shoots forth again,

And guides her passions by her young ones cries.

Dryden.

Heaven's imperious queen shot down from high,

At her approach the brazen hinges fly,

The gates are forc'd.

Dryden.

She downward glides,

Lights in Fleet-ditch, and shoots beneath the tides.

Gay.

Where the mob gathers, swiftly shoot along,

Nor idly mingle in the noisy throng.

Gay.

Not half so swiftly shoots along as air

The gliding lightning.

Pope.

9. To feel a quick glancing pain.

SHOOT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act or impression of any thing emitted from a distance.

The Turkish bow giveth a very forcible shoot, inasmuch as the arrow hath pierced a steel target two inches thick; but the arrow, if headed with wood, hath been known to pierce through a piece of wood of eight inches thick.

Bacon.

2. The act of striking, or endeavouring to strike, with a missile weapon discharged by any instrument.

The noise of thy cross-bow

Will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost.

Shelley.

But come the bow; now mercy goes to kill,

And shooting well is then accounted ill.

Thus will I save my credit in the shoot;
Not wounding, pity would not let me do 't.

Shakespeare.

As a country-fellow was making a shoot at a pigeon, he trod upon a snake that bit him.

L'Estrange.

[Scheuten, Dut.] Branches issuing from the main flock.

They will not come just on the tops where they springs.

Bacon.

I saw them under a green mantling vine,
Picking ripe clusters from the tender shoots.

Milton.

Prune off superfluous branches, and shoots of this kind and spring, but expose not the fruit without leaves sufficient.

Evelyn.

The hook she bore
To lop the growth of the luxuriant year,
To decent form the lawless shoots to bring,
And teach th' obedient branches where to spring.

Pope.

Now, should my praises owe their truth
To beauty, dress, or paint, or youth,
I were grating on an annual flock
That must our expectations mock;
And, making one luxuriant shoot,
The next year for want of root.

Swift.

He pulled forth buds at every branching shoot,
And virtue shrank almost beneath the root.

She sat over against him, a good way off, as it were a bow shot. Genes.

4. [shot, French.] A sum charged; a reckoning.

A man is never welcome to a place, till some certain shot be paid, and the hostess say welcome. Shakespeare.

As the fund of our pleasure, let each pay his shot;
For hence be the sad, the lowd top, and the lot. Ben Jonson.

Shepherd, leave decoying,
Eyes are sweet a summer's day,
But a little after toying. Dryden.

Women have the shot to pay.

He touch'd the pot, when others touch'd the pot;
The hand that sign'd the mortgage paid the shot. Swift.

SHOT. n. f. [preota, Saxon; trutta minor, Latin.] A fish.

The shot, peculiar to Devonshire and Cornwall, in shape and colour resembleth the trout; howbeit in liness and goodness cometh far behind him. Carew.

SHOTFREE. adj. [shot, and free.]

1. Clear of the reckoning.

S H O

Though I could 'scape shotfree at London, I fear the shot here: here's no scoring but upon the pate. Shakespeare.

2. Not to be hurt by shot.

3. Unpunished.

SHOTTEN. adj. [from shoot.]

1. Having ejected the spawn.

Go thy ways, old Jack; die when thou wilt, if good manhood be not forgot upon the earth, then am I a shotten herring. Shakespeare.

Ask for what price thy venal tongue was sold!
Tough wither'd truffles, rosy wine, a dish
Of shotten herrings, or stale stinking fish. Dryden.

2. Curdled by keeping too long.

TO SHOVE. v. a. [scupan, Saxon; schuy, en, Dutch.]

1. To push by main strength.

on. Shakespeare.

In the corrupted currents of this world,
Offence's gilded hand may shove by justice,
And oft the wicked prize itself
Buys out the law. Shakespeare.

I sent your grace
The parcels and particulars of our grief,
The which hath been with scorn shov'd from the court. Shakespeare.

Of other care they little reck'ning make,
Than how to scramble at the flatters' feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest. Milton.

There the British Neptune flood,
Beneath them to submit th' obvious flood,
And with his trident shov'd them off the land. Dryden.

Shoving back this earth on which I sit,
I'll mount. Dryden.

A strong man was going to shove down St. Paul's cupola. Arbutnot.

pole.

He grasp'd the oar,
Receiv'd his guests aboard, and shov'd from shore. Garth.

SHOVE. n. f. [from the verb.] The act of shoving; a push.

I was forced to swim behind, and push the boat forward with one of my hands; and, the tide favouring me, I could feel the ground. I rested two minutes, and then gave the boat another shove. Gull. Trav.

SHOVEL. n. f. [scopel, Saxon; schuvel, Dutch.] An instrument consisting of a long handle and broad blade with raised edges.

A handbarrow, wheelbarrow, shotel, and spade. Tusser.

The brag of the Ottoman, that he would throw Malta into the sea, might be performed at an easier rate than by the shovels of his Janizaries. Glavin.

TO SHOVEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To throw or heap with a shovel.

S H O

I thought
To die upon the bed my father died,
To lie close by his honest bones; but now
Some hangman must put on my shroud, and lay me
Where no priest shovels in dust. Shakespeare.

2. To gather in great quantities.

Ducks shovel them up as they swim along the waters; but divers insects also devour them. Derham.

SHOVELBOARD. n. f. [shovel and board.]

duty to go.

3. If I SHOULD go. If it happens that I go.

4. Thou SHOULDST go. Thou oughtest to go.

5. If thou SHOULDST go. If it happens that thou goest.

6. The same significations are found in all the other persons singular and plural.

I do not a delicate action more engage you Than salety should. Ben Jonson.

Some poets come of good wills and respects, when, by telling men what they are, they represent to them what they should be. Bacon.

To do thee honour I will shed their blood,
Which the just laws, if I were faultless, should. Waller.

So subjects love just kings, or so they should. Dryden.

7. SHOUN be. A proverbial phrase of flight contempt or irony.

I conclude, that things are not as they should be. Swift.

The girls look upon their father as a clown, and the boys think their mother no better than the should be. Addison.

8. There is another signification now little in use, in which should has scarcely any distinct or explicable meaning. It should be differs in this sense very little from it is.

There is a fabulous narration, that in the northern countries there should be an herb that growth in the likeness of a lamb, and feedeth upon the grass. Bacon.

SHOULDER. n. f. [sculope, Sax. scholder, Dutch.]

1. The joint which connects the arm to the body.

I have seen better faces in my times,
Than stand on any shoulder that I see. Shakespeare.

Before me. Swift.

It is a fine thing to be carried on men's shoulders;

but give God thanks that thou art not forced to carry a rich soul upon thy shoulders, as those poor men do.

The head of the shoulder-bone, being round, is inserted into a shallow cavity in the scapula, that, were there no other guards for it, it would be thrust out upon every occasion.

2. The upper joint of the fore leg of edible animals.

We must have a shoulder of mutton for a property.

He took occasion, from a shoulder of mutton, to cry up the plenty of England.

3. The upper part of the back.

Emily de'st'd horrid in each array;
Fresh as the month, and as the morning fair,
Adown her shoulders fell her length of hair.

4. The shoulders are used as emblems of strength, or the act of supporting.

Ev'n as thou wilt, sweet Warwick, let it be;
For on thy shoulders do I build my fate.

The king has cur'd me; and from these shoulders,
These ruin'd pillars, out of pity taken
A load would sink a navy.

5. A rising part; a prominence. A term among artificers.

When you rivet a pin into a hole, your pin must have a shoulder to it thicker than the hole is wide, that the shoulder slip not through the hole as well as the shank.

TO SHOULDER, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To push with influence and violence.

The rolling billows beat the ragged shore,
As they the earth would shoulder from her seat.

Dudman, a well-known foreland to most sailors,
Here shoulders out the ocean, to shape the tame a large bottom between itself.

You debate yourself,
To think of mixing with the ignoble herd;
What shall the people know then god-like prince Headed a rabble, and potent'd his pector, Shoulder'd with filth?

So vast the navy now at anchor rides,
That underneath it the press'd waters bul,
And, with his weight, it shoulders off the tides.

Around her numberless the rabble flow'd,
Shoulder'd each other, crowding for a view.

When Hopkiss dies, a thousand lights attend
The wretch who living laid a candle's end;
Shoulder'd God's altar a vile image stands,
Besides his features, may extends his hands.

2. To put upon the shoulder.

Archimedes's lifting up Marcellus's ships finds little more credit than that of the giants shoulder- ing mountains.

SHOULDERBELT, n. f. [shoulder and belt.]

A belt that comes across the shoulder.

Thou hast an ulcer that no leech can heal,
Though thy broad shoulder-belt the wound conceal.

SHOULDERBLADE, n. f. The scapula;
the blade bone to which the arm is connected.

If I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate, then let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone.

SHOULDERCLAPPER, n. f. [shoulder and clap.] One who affects familiarity, or one that mischiefs privily.

A fiend, a fury, pitiless and tough;
A back friend, a shoulder-clapper, one that commands

The passages of alleys.

SHOULDERHOTTEN, adj. [shoulder and hot.] Strained in the shoulder.

His horse wail'd in the back, and shoulderhotten.

SHOULDERSLIP, n. f. [shoulder and slip.]

The horse will take so much care of himself as to come off with only a strain or a shoulderslip.

TO SHOULDER, v. n. [a word of which no etymology is known.] To cry in triumph or exhortation.

They shouldered thrice: what was the last cry for?

Shout unto God with the voice of triumph.

It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery.

The shouting for thy summer fruits and harvest is taken.

He flouts and shouts; but flying bullets now
To execute his rage appear too slow:

They miss, or sweep but common souls away;
For such lo'st Op'd on his life must pay.

There had been nothing but howlings and shoutings of poor naked men, beslabouring one another with fringed tucks.

All clad in flims of beasts, the jav'lin bear,
And thricks and shoutings rend the tail ring air.

What hinders you to take the man you love?
The people will be glad, the soldiers shout;
And Bertran, though repining, will be aw'd.

SHOUT, n. f. [from the verb.] A loud and vehement cry of triumph or exhortation.

Thanks, gentle citizens:
This general applause, and cheerful shout,
Argues your wisdom and your love to Richard.

The Rhodians, seeing the enemy turn their backs, gave a great shout in derision.

Then he might have died of all admir'd,
And his triumphant soul with shouts expr'd.

SHOUTER, n. f. [from shout.] He who shouts.

A peal of loud applause rang out,
And thund'ring the air, till even the birds fell down
Upon the shouters heads.

TO SHOW, v. a. pret. showed and shewn;
part. pass. shown. [reapen, Sax. schowen, Dutch.] This word is frequently written show; but since it is always pronounced, and often written, show, which is favoured likewise by the Dutch schowen, I have adjusted the orthography to the pronunciation.]

1. To exhibit to view, as an agent.

If I do feign,
O let me in my present wildness die,
And never live to show the incredulous world
The noble change that I have purposed.

Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee?

Men should not take a charge upon them that they are not fit for, as if singing, dancing, and showing of tricks, were qualifications for a governor.

I through the ample air in triumph high,
Shall lead thee captive, mangle hell, and show
The pow'r's of darkness bound.

2. To afford to the eye or notice, as a thing containing or exhibiting.

Nor want we skill or art, from whence to raise Magnificence; and what can heav'n show more?

A mirror in one hand collective shews,
Varied and multiplied, the groups of woes.

3. To make to see.

Not higher that hill, nor wider, looking round,
Whereto for different cause the tempter set
Our second Adam in the wilderness,
To show him all earth's kingdoms and glory.

Yet him, God the most high vouchsafes
To call by vision from his father's house,
His kindred and false gods, into a land
Which he will show him.

4. To make to perceive.

The melenient seasons, rain, ice, hail, and snow,
Which now the sky with various face begins
To show us in this mountain, while the winds Blow moist and keen.

5. To make to know.

Him the Most High,
Rapt in a balmy cloud with winged seeds

Did, as thou saw'st, receive, to walk with God
High in salvation and the climes of bliss,
Exempt from death; to show thee what reward Awaits the good.

A shooting star,
In autumn thwarts the night, when vapors lie
Impress the air, and shows the machiner
From what point of his compass to beware

Impetuous winds

Know, I am sent
To show thee what shall come in future days
To thee and to thy off spring; good with bad Expect to hear.

6. To give proof; to prove.

This I urge to show
Invalid that which thee to doubt it mov'd

I'll to the citadel repair,
And show my duty by my timely care.

Achates' diligence his duty shows.

7. To publish; to make public; to proclaim.

You are a chosen generation, that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness.

8. To inform; to teach; with of.

I shall no more speak in proverbs, but show you plainly of the Father.

9. To make known.

I raised thee up to show in thee my power.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape,
Like his, and color serpentine, may show
Thy inward fraud, to warn all creatures from thee.

10. To conduct. To show, in this sense, is to show the way.

She taking him for some cautious city patient, that came for privacy, shows him into the dining room.

11. To offer; to afford.

To him that is afflicted, pity should be show'd
from his friend.

Felix willing to show the Jews a pleasure, in Paul bound.

Thou shalt utterly destroy them; make no covenant with them, nor show mercy unto them.

12. To explain; to expound.

Forasmuch as knowledge and showing of hard sentences, and dissolving of doubts, were found in the name, Daniel let him be called.

13. To discover; to point out.

Why stand we longer showing under fears,
That show no end but death?

TO SHOW, v. n.

1. To appear; to look; to be in appearance.

She shows a body rather than a life,
A flame than a brother.

Just such she shows before a rising storm.

Still on we press; and here renew the carriage.
So great, that in the stream the moon shows a purple.

2. To have appearance; to become well of ill.

My lord of York, it better show'd with you,
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you, to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text,

Than now to see you here, an iron man,
Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum.

SHOW, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A spectacle; something publicly exposed to view for money.

I do not know what the may produce me, but provided it be a show, I shall be very well satisfied.

The dwarf kept the gates of the show room.

2. Superficial appearance; not reality.

Mild heav'n
Disapproves that care, though wise in show,
That with superfluous burden loads the day.

3. Ostentatious display.

Nor doth his grandeur, and majestic show
Of luxury, though call'd magnificence, Allure mine eye.

Stand before her in a golden dream;

Set all the pleasures of the world to show,
And as vainly say for her that she is free,
The richest man
Rings from above ten thousand blessings down,
For he is set so high for show and grace.
Never was a charge maintained with such a show of gravity, which had a lighter foundation. Afterd.
I envy none their pageantry and show,
I envy none the gilding of their woe. Young.

4. Object attracting notice.
The city itself makes the noblest show of any in the world; the houses are most of them painted on the outside, so that they look extremely gay and lively. Addison.

5. Public appearance: contrary to concealment.
I saw him from his grave,
Spout'd punctuations and pow'rs, triumph'd
In open show, and with ascension bright Captivity led captive. Milton.

6. Semblance; likeness.
When devils walk their blackest sins put on,
They do suggest at first with heavenly shows. Shakespeare.

He through pass'd the middle unmark'd,
In show plebeian angel militant. Milton.

7. Speciousness; plausibility.
The places of Isechiel have some show in them;
For there the Lord commandeth the Levites, which had committed idolatry, to be put from their dignity, and serve at a feign'd ministry. Whitgift.
The kindred of the slain forgive the deed;
But a short exile must for show precede. Dryden.

8. External appearance.
Shall I say O Selma? Alas, your words be against it. Shall I say prince Myrocles? Wretch that I am, your show is manifest against it. Sidney.
Fierce was the fight on the proud Belgianside,
For honour, which they seldom sought before;
But now they by their own vain boasts were tied,
And forc'd, at least in show, to prize it more. Dryden.

9. Exhibition to view.
I have a letter from her;
The which whoso'er is so larded with my matter,
That neither singly can be manifested,
Without the show of both. Shakespeare.

10. Pomp; magnificent spectacle.
As for triumphs, masks, tracts, and such shows,
We need not be put in mind of them. Bacon.

11. Phantom; not reality.
What you saw was all a fairy show;
And all those airy shapes you now behold
Were human bodies once. Dryden.

12. Representative action.
Hono was so overwhelmed with happiness, that he could not make a reply; but expressed in dumb show those sentiments of gratitude that were too big for utterance. Addison.

SHOEBREAD or SHEWBREAD. n. f. [show and bread.] Among the Jews, they thus called loaves of bread that the priest of the week put every Sabbath day upon the golden table, which was in the sanctuary before the Lord. They were covered with leaves of gold, and were twelve in number, representing the twelve tribes of Israel. They served them up hot, and at the same time took away the stale ones, which could not be eaten but by the priest alone. This offering was accompanied with frankincense and salt.
Calmel.
Set upon the table shewbread before me. Exodus.

SHOWER. n. f. [scheure, Dutch.]
1. Rain either moderate or violent.
Is the day here not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
And then will do well too such a shift. Shakespeare.
The ancient cinnamon was, while it grew, the soft, and in showers it perspired words. Bacon.
2. Storm of any thing falling thick,
Vol. II.

3. All set then in a shower of gold, and hail Rich pearls upon thee. Shakespeare.
Give me a storm; if it be love,
Like Daniel in the golden shower,
I swim in pleasure. Carroll.
With showers of flowers he drives them far away;
The festering dogs around at distance bay. Pope.

3. Any very liberal distribution.
He and myself
Have travell'd in the great shower of your gifts,
And sweetly felt it. Shakespeare.

TO SHOWER, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To wet or drown with rain.
Serve they as a flow'ry verge, to bind
The fluid fountains of that same wat'ry cloud, Left it again dissolv'd, and show'r the earth. Milton.
The sun more glad imparts his beams,
Than in fair evening cloud, or humid bow,
When God hath show'r'd the earth. Milton.

2. To pour down.
There, lull'd by nightingales, embracing sleep;
And on their naked limbs the flow'ry roof
Shower'd roses, which the morn repair'd. Milton.

3. To distribute or scatter with great liberality.
After this fair discharge, all civil honours having show'r'd on him before, there now fell out occasion to action. Watson.
Caesar's favour,
That show'r'd down greatness on his friends, will raise me
To Rome's first honours. Addison.

TO SHOWER, v. n. To be rainy.
SHOWERY, adj. [from shower.] Rainy.
A hilly field, where the stubble is standing, set on fire in the show'ry season, will put forth multitudes. Bacon.
Murrinus came from Auxur's show'ry height,
With ragged rocks and stony quarries white,
Seated on hills. Addison.
The combat thickens, like the storm that flies
From westward, when the show'ry winds arise.
Addison.

SHOW'Y. adj. [from show.]
1. Splendid; gaudy.
The escutcheons of the company are show'ish, and will look magnificent. Smyth.

2. Ostentatious.
SHOWN. [pret. and part. pass. of To show.]
Exhibited.
Mercy shown on man by him lov'd. Milton.

SHOW'Y, adj. [from show.] Ostentatious.
Men of warm imaginations neglect solid and substantial happiness for what is showy and superficial. Addison.

SHRANK. The preterit of shrink.
The children of Israel eat not of the sinew which shrank upon the hollow of the thigh. Genesis.

TO SHRED, v. a. pret. shred. [prepenban, Saxon.] To cut into small pieces. Commonly used of cloth or herbs.
It hath a number of short cuts or shreadings, which may be better called withes than prayers.
Hooker.
One gathered wild gourds, and shred them.
2 Kings.
Where did you whet your knife to-night, he cries,
And shred the leeks that in your house are ripe?
Dryden.

SHERD, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A small piece cut off.
Gold, grown somewhat churlish by recovering, is made more pliant by throwing in shreds of tanned leather. Bacon.
The mighty Tyrian queen, that gain'd
With subtle shreds a tract of land,
Did leave it with a cattle fair
To his great ancestor.
A beggar might patch up a garment with such shreds as the world throws away. Pope.

2. A fragment.
They said they were an hungry; sigh'd forth proverbs.

Timon broke these walls; that dogs must eat:
And with these shreds they wanted their compings. Shakespeare.

SHREDS of wit and senseless rhymes
Blunder'd out a thousand times. Smyth.
His panegyric is made up of half a dozen shreds,
like a school-boy's theme, beaten general topics.
Smyth.

SHREW. n. f. [schreyen, German, to clammour.] A peevish, malignant, clamorous, spiteful, vexatious, turbulent woman.
It appears in Robert of Glouceter, that this word signified anciently any one perverse or obdurate of either sex.
There dede of hem vor hanger a thousand and mo,
And yet holde the pence to none pego. Robert of Glouceter.
Be merry, be merry, my wife has shrew;
For women are shrews both stout and tall. Shakespeare.
By this reckoning he is more shrew than she.
Shakespeare.
A man had got a shrew to his wife, and there could be no quiet in the house for her. L'Estrange.
Her fallow cheeks her envious mood did show,
And ev'ry feature spoke about the shrew. Dryden.
Every one of them, who is a shrew in domestic life, is now become a scold in politics. Addison.

SUREW. adj. [contracted from shrewed.]
1. Having the qualities of a shrew; malicious; troublesome; mischievous.
Per child's filter is to cast and shrewed,
That till the father ends his hands of her,
Your love must live a maid. Shakespeare.

2. Maliciously, cunning; more artful than good.
It was a shrewd saying of the old monk, that two kind of prisons would serve for all offenders, as inquisition and a bedlam; if any man should deny the being of a God, and the immortality of the soul, such a one should be put into the first, as being a desperate heretic; but if any man should profess to believe these things, and yet allow himself in any known wickedness, such a one should be put into bedlam. Tillotson.
A spiteful saying gratifies so many little passions, that it meets with a good reception; and the man who utters it is looked upon as a shrewd satirist.
Addison.
Corruption proceeds from employing those who have the character of a shrewd worldly man, instead of such as have had a liberal education, and trained up in virtue. Addison.

3. Bad; ill-betokening.
Scarce any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself; and consequently we may take it for a shrewd indication and sign, whereby to judge of those who have sinned with too much caution, to suffer the world to charge sins directly upon their conversation. South.

4. Painful; pinching; dangerous; mischievous.
Every of this number,
That have endur'd shrewd nights and days with us,
Shall share the good of our returned fortune. Shuff.
When a man thinks he has a servant, he finds a traitor that cuts his bread, and is readier to do him a mischief, and a shrewd turn, than an open adversary. Couch.
No enemy is so despicable but he may do a body
a shrewd turn. L'Estrange.

SHREW'DLY, adv. [from shrewd.]
1. Mischievously; destructively.
This practice hath most shrewdly put upon thee.
Shakespeare.
At Oxford, his youth, and want of experience in maritime service, had somewhat been shrewdly touched, even before the strokes of popular liberty were let open. Watson.

2. Vexatiously. It is used commonly of slight mischief, or in general expression.
The oblique and satirical are like to shock themselves shrewdly hard, too soon, by being not off from that body which they choose not to be off from. South.

The intention robbers upon this story
You seem'd the not to which, tho' shrewdly you'd.
Dryden.

3. With good guests.
Four per cent. increases not the number of tenders; as any man at first hearing will shrewdly suspect it. Locke.

SHREW'DNESS, n. f. [from shrew'd.]

1. Sly cunning; archness.
Her garboles, which not wanted shrewdness of policy too, did you too much disquiet. Shakespeare.
The neighbours round admire his shrewdness.
For songs of loyalty and lewdness. Swift.
2. Mischievousness; petulance.

SHREW'ISH, adj. [from shrew.] Having

SHREW'HOUSE, n. f. [repeapa, Saxon.]
A mouse of which the bite is generally supposed venomous, and to which vulgar tradition assigns such malignity, that the is said to lame the foot over which she runs. I am informed that all these reports are calumnious, and that her feet and teeth are equally harmless with those of any other little mouse. Our ancestors however looked on her with such terror, that they are supposed to have given her name to a scolding woman, whom for her venom they call a shrew.

TO SHRIEK, v. n. [skrieger, Danish; seric-ciolare, Italian.] To cry out inarticusight, why the bush is not burnt. Levi.

I took a rebuke at Naples to carry me to Rome, that I might not run over the same sights a second time. Addison.

Not proud Olympus yields a nobler sight,
Though gods assembled grace his tow'ring height,
Than what more humble mountains offer here;
Where, in their blessings, all those gods appear. Pope.

Before you pass th' imaginary sights
Of lords, and eels, and dukes, and garter'd nights,
While the spread fan o'erthrows your closing eyes,
Then give one flint, and all the vision flies. Pope.

SIGHTED. adj. [from sight.] Seeing in a particular manner. It is used only in composition, as quicksighted, shortsighted.
As they might, to avoid the weather, pull the Joins of the coach up close, so they might put each end down, and remain as discovered and open as on horseback.

The king was very quick sighted in discerning dissimulation, and raising objections, and very slow in suffering them.

SIGHTFULNESS, n. f. [from sight and full.] Perspicuity; clearness of sight. Not in use.

The impression of a signet ring.

SIGNIFICANCE, n. f. [from significans.]

1. Power of signifying; meaning.

Speaking is a sensible expression of the notion of the mind, by determinations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by content several determinate significances.

He declares he intends it for the honour of another, he takes away by his words the significance of his action.

2. Force; energy; power of impressing the mind.

The clearness of conception and expression, the boldness maintained to reject the propriety and sound of words, not framed into bombast, must escape our transient view upon the theatre.

As far as this duty will admit of privacy, our Saviour hath enjoined it in terms of particular significance and force.

I have been admiring the wonderful significance of that word perfection, and what various interpretations it hath acquired.

3. Importance; moment; consequence.

How fatal would such a distinction have proved in former reigns, when many a cur unskillful officer significance has been construed into an overt act of high treason.

SIGNIFICANT, adj. [from significans, Latin.]

1. Expressive of something beyond the external mark.

Since you are tongue-tied, and so loth to speak, In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts.

2. Betokening; standing as a sign of something.

It was well said of Plotinus, that the stars were significant, but not efficient.

3. Expressive or representative in an eminent degree; forcible to impress the intended meaning.

Whereas it may be objected, that to add to religious duties such rites and ceremonies as are significant, is to institute new sacraments.

Common life is full of this kind of significant expression, by knocking, beckoning, frowning, and painting; and dumb persons are fugacious in the use of them.

The Romans joined both devices, to make the emblem more significant; as, indeed, they could not too much extol the learning and military virtues of this emperor.

Important; momentous. A low word.

SIGNIFICANTLY. adv. [from significant.]

With force of expression.

Christianity is known in scripture by no name

so significantly as by the simplicity of the gospel.

SIGNIFICATION. n. f. [signification, Fr.

significatio, Lat. from signify.]

1. The act of making known by signs.

A lie is properly a species of injustice, and a violation of the right of that person to whom the false speech is directed; for all speaking, or signification of one's mind, implies an act or address of one man to another.

2. Meaning expressed by a sign or word.

An adjective requireth another word to be joined with him, to shew his signification.

Brute animals make divers motions to have several significations, to call, warn, cherish, and threaten.

SIGNIFICATIVE. adj. [significatif, Fr. from signify.]

1. Betokening by an external sign.

The holy symbols or signs are not barely significant, but what by divine institution they represent and testify unto our souls, is truly and eternally delivered unto us.

2. Forceful; strongly expressive.

Neither in the degrees of kindred they were destitute of significant words; for whom we call grandfather, they called caldfader; whom we call great-grandfather, they called thirthead.

SIGNIFICATORY. n. f. [from signify.]

That which signifies or betokens.

Here is a double significatory of the spirit, a word and a sign.

To SIGNIFY. v. a. [signifier, Fr. signifier, Lat.]

1. To declare by some token or sign; sometimes simply to declare.

Stephano, signify

Within the house your mitres is at hand.

But found the power's displeas'd.

Those parts of nature, into which the chaos was divid'd, they signified by dark and obscure names;

as the night, Tartarus, and Oceanus.

2. To mean; to express.

Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player,

That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,

And then is heard no more! It is a tale

Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,

Signifying nothing!

By scripture, antiquity, and all ecclesiastical writers, it is constantly appropriated to Saturday,

the day of the Jews' abstinence, and but of late years used to signify the Lord's day.

3. To support; to weigh. This is seldom used but interrogatively, what signifies?

or with much, little, or nothing.

Though he that sins frequently, and repents frequently, gives reason to believe his repentances before God signify nothing; yet that is nothing to us.

What signifies the splendour of courts, considering the slavish attendances that go along with it?

He hath one way more, which, although it signifies little to men of sober reason, yet unhappily is the supicious humour of men, that governors have a design to impose.

In the first of these last, the power of Adam, were never so great, will signify nothing to the present generations in the world.

What signifies the people's consent in making and repealing laws, if the person who administers hath no tie?

of Ireland, that want of silver is not to be remedied.

To SIGNIFY. v. n. To express meaning with force.

If the words be but comely and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice; but where that wanteth, the language is thin.

SIGNIORY. n. f. [signoria, Italian.]

1. Lordship; dominion.

Through all the signories it was the first,

And Prospero the prime duke.

The earls, their titles, and their signories,

They must restore again.

My brave progenitors, by valour, zeal,

Gain'd those high honours, princely signories,

And proud prerogatives.

2. It is used by Shakespeare for seniority.

If ancient forrow be most reverent,

Give mine the benefit of signiory.

And let my griefs frown on the upper hand.

SIGNPOST. n. f. [sign and post.] That upon which a sign hangs.

He should share with them in the preserving

A shed or signpost.

This noble invention of our author's hath been copied by so many signpost dawblers, that now grown fulltime, rather by their want of skill than

by the commonness.

SICKER. adj. and adv. See SICKER. The old word for sure, or surely.

SICKNESS. n. f. [from sicker.] Surenels;

safety.

SILENCE. n. f. [silence, Fr. silentium,

Latin.]

1. The state of holding peace; forbearance of speech.

Unto me men gave ear, and waited and kept silence at my counsel.

I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence.

First to himself he inward silence broke.

Speech submissively withdraws

From rights of subjects, and the poor man's cause;

Then pompous silence reigns, and fills the noisy laws.

Here all their rage and ev'n their murmurs cease,

And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace.

2. Habitual taciturnity; not loquacity.

I think the best grace of wit will shortly turn us to silence, and discourse grow commendable in none but parrots.

3. Secrecy.

4. Stillness; not noise.

Hail, happy groves! calm and secure retreat

Of sacred silence, rest's eternal seat!

5. Not mention; oblivion; obscurity.

Nameless in dark oblivion let them dwell,

For strength from truth divid'd, and from just blaudable, nought merits but disgrace

And ignominy; yet to glory aspire,

Vain-glorious, and through many tocks fame;

Therefore eternal silence be their doom.

Thus fame shall be achiev'd,

And what most merits fame in silence hid.

SILENCE. interj. An authoritative restraint

of speech.

Sir, have pity; I'll be his surety.—

—Silence! one word more

Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee, —Silence!

To SILENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To oblige to hold peace; to forbid to speak.

We must silence the people, that to 's power

He would have made them quiet, silenc'd them

pleaders, and

Dispersed their freedoms.

Silence that dreadful bell; it frights the idle

From her propriety.

This pass'd as an oracle, and silenced those that moved the question.

Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenced, who being expos'd unto wolves, gave loud expressions of their faith, and were heard as high as heaven.

This would silence all further opposition.

Since in dark forrow I my days did spend,

I could not silence my complaints.

Had they duly considered the extent of infinite knowledge and power, these would have silenced

their scruples, and they had adored the amazing mystery.

It pleas'd him altogether to silence me, so that I shall not only speak with decency, but wholly be disabled to open my mouth, to any articulate utterance; yet I hope he will give me grace, even in my thoughts, to praise him.

2. To still.

These dying lovers, and their floating souls

Suspend the light, and silence all our guns.

The thunder spoke, nor durst the queen reply

A reverend horror silenc'd all the sky.

SILENT. adj. [silens, Lat.]

1. Not speaking; mute.

O my God, I cry in the day time, and in the night season I am not silent.

Confounded, long they sat as stricken mute.

2. Not talkative; not loquacious.

Ulysses, adds he, was the most eloquent and most fit of men; he knew that a word spoken never wrought to much good as a word concealed.

3. Still; having no noise.

Deep night, dark night, the silence of the night,

The time of night when Troy was set on fire,

The time when a reechowls cry, and ban-dogs howl.

Now is the pleasant time,

The cool, the silence, have where silence yields

To the night's warbling bird.

4. Wanting efficacy. I think a hebraist.

Second, and innumerable causes, together with nature itself, without that operative faculty which

God gave them, would become silent, virtuteless, and dead.

The sun to me is dark,

And silent as the moon,

When she defects the night,

Had in her secret in a lunar cave.

5. Not mentioning.

This new created world, whereof in hell

Fame is not silent.

SILENTLY. adv. [from silent.]

Add to your criminals the simoniack ladies, who seduce the sacred order into the difficulty of breaking their troth. Spectator.

SIMONY. n. f. [Simonie, Fr. simonia, Lat.] The crime of buying or selling church preferment.

One that by suggestion Tied all the kingdom; simony was fair play, His own opinion was his law. Shakspeare.

Many papers remain in private hands, of which one is of simony; and I with the world might see it, that it might undeceive some patrons, who think they have discharged that great trust to God and man, if they take no money for a living, though it may be paited with for other ends less justifiable. Walton.

No simony nor sinecure is known; There works the bee, no honey for the drone. Garth.

TO SIMPER. v. n. [from pymbelan, Saxon, to keep holyday, Skinner.] He derives simmer from the same word, and confirms his etymology by writing it simber. It is perhaps derived from simmer, as it may seem to imitate the dimples of water gently boiling. To simile; generally to smile foolishly.

A made countenance about her mouth between simpering and smiling, her head bowed somewhat down, seemed to languish with over-much idleness. Sedgwick.

I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women, as I perceive by your simpering none of you hate them, to like as much as pleases them. Shakspeare.

Stars above simper and shine, As having keys into thy love, while poor I pine. Herbert.

Let then the fair one beautifully cry, Or dress in smiles of sweet Cecilia's name, With simpering angels, palms, and harps divine. Pope.

SIMPER. n. f. [from the verb.] Smile, generally a foolish smile.

SIMPLE. adj. [simplex, Lat. simplex, Fr.]

1. Plain; artless; unskilled; undeighting; sincere; harmless.

Were it not to satisfy the minds of the simple sort of men, these nice curiosities are not worthy the labour which we bestow to answer them. Hooker.

They meet upon the way A simple husbandman in garments grey. Hub, Tab.

I am a simple woman, much too weak To oppose your cunning. Shakspeare.

O Elcinda, My heart was made to fit and pair with thine, Simple and plain, and taught with artless tenderness. Rowe.

In simple suanners all the secret lies; Be kind and virtuous, you'll be blest and wise. Young.

2. Uncompounded; unmingled; single; only one; plain; not complicated.

To make the compound pass for the rich metal simple, is an adulteration or counterfeiting. Bacon.

Simple philosophically signifies single, but vulgarly foolish. Watts.

Among substances, some are called simple, some compound, whether taken in a philosophical or vulgar sense. If we take simple and compound in a vulgar sense, then all those are simple substances which are generally effected uniform in their natures: to every herb is called a simple, and every metal a mineral, though the chymist perhaps may find all these several elements in each of them. Wallis.

Let Newton, pure intelligence, whom God To mortal's lent, to trace his boundless works, From laws, sublimely simple, speak thy name In all philosophy. Thomson.

3. Silly; not wise; not cunning. The simple believeth every word; but the prudent man looketh well to his going. Proverbs.

Dick, simple odes too many show ye My servile complaisance to Chloe.

SIMPLE. n. f. [simple, French.] A single ingredient in a medicine; a drug. It is popularly used for an herb.

SIMPLICITY. n. f. [simplicitas, Latin.]

simplicitas, French.]

1. Plainness; artlessness; not subtilty; not cunning; not deceit.

The two etimologies I believe were in their degree of well-doing, to whom the not knowing of evil serveth for a ground of virtue, and hold their inward powers in better form, with an unspotted simplicity, than many who rather cunningly try to know what goodness is, than willingly to know themselves the following of it. Stany.

They keep the reverend simplicity of ancient times.

In low simplicity.

He lends out money gratis, and brings down
The rate of usance.

Marquis Dorset, a man for his harmless simplicity neither mistaked nor much regarded, was created duke.

Suspicion sleeps

At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity
Redeigns her charge.

Of manners gentle, of affections mild;
In wit a man, simplicity a child.

The native elegance and simplicity of her manners were accompanied with real benevolence of heart.

2. Plainness; not subtilty; not abstruseness.

Thou enter into farther speculations herein, which is the itch of curiosity, and content not themselves with the simplicity of that doctrine, within which this church hath contained herself.

3. Plainness; not finery.

They represent our poet, when he left Mantua for Rome, dressed in his best habit, too fine for the place whence he came, and yet retaining part of its simplicity.

4. Singleness; not composition; state of being uncompounded.

Mandrakes afford a papaverous unpleasant odour in the leaf or apple, discoverable in their simplicity and mixture.

We are led to conceive that great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity than now it is, as to conceive a watch once in its first and simple materials.

5. Weakness; silliness.

Many that know what they should do, would nevertheless dissemble it, and, to excuse themselves, pretend ignorance and simplicity, which simplicity cannot.

How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity, and fools hate knowledge?

SIMPLIST. n. f. [from simple.] One skilled in simples.

A plant so unlike a rose, it hath been mistaken by some good simplists for anemone.

SIMPLY. adv. [from simple.]

1. Without art; without subtilty; plainly; artlessly.

Accomplishing great things by things deemed weak;

Subverting worldly strong and worldly wise
By simply meek.

2. Of itself; without addition.

This question about the changing of laws concerneth only such laws as are positive, and do make that now good or evil, by being commanded or forbidden, which otherwise of itself were not simply the one or the other.

3. Merely; solely.

Under man, no creature in the world is capable of felicity and bliss; because their chiefest perfection consisteth in that which is best for them, but not in that which is simply best, as ours doth.

I will eat and drink, and sleep as fast
As captain shall; simply the thing I am Shall make me live.

To say or to do ought with memory and imitation, no purpose or respect should sooner move us, than simply the love of God and of mankind.

4. Foolishly; sillily.

SIMULAR. n. f. [from simulo, Latin.] One that counterfeits.

Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjuror, thou simular of virtue,
That art incestuous.

SIMULATION. n. f. [Simulation, French; simulatio, from simulo, Latin.] That part of hypocrisy which pretends that to be which is not.

Simulation is a vice rising of a natural falsehood, or fearfulness; or of a mind that hath some main fault; which, because a man must needs disguise, it maketh him practise simulation.

For the unquestionable virtue of her person and mind, he well expressed his love in an act and time of simulation towards his end, bequeathing her all his mansion-houses, and a power to dispose of his whole personal estate.

For distinction sake, a deceiving by word is commonly called a lye; and deceiving by actions, gestures, or behaviour, is called simulation or hypocrisy.

SIMULTANEOUS. adj. [Simultaneus, Lat.] Acting together; existing at the same time.

If the parts may all change places at the same time, without any respect of priority or posteriority to each other's motion, why may not bullets, closely crowded in a box, move by a like mutual and simultaneous exchange?

SIN. n. f. [ryn, Saxon.]

1. An act against the laws of God; a violation of the laws of religion.

It is great sin to swear unto a sin.
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath.

How huff thou the heart,
Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
A sin abuser, and my friend profest,

To mangle me with that word bannishment?
Put those that sleep, and think not on their sin, Punch them.

Thou knowest, Lord, that I am pure from all sin with man.

2. Habitual negligence of religion.

Sin, death, and hell, have set their marks upon him,
And all their ministers attend on him.

Dishonest thame
Of nature's works: honour dishonourable,
Sin-bred, how have ye troubled all mankind!

I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds,
With the rank vapours of the sin-worn mould.

Is there no means, but that a sin-sick land
Should be let blood with such a boist'rous hand?

Vice or virtue chiefly imply the relation of our actions to men in this world: sin and holiness rather imply their relation to God and the other world.

Light from her thought, a summer's careless robe,
Fell each affection of this sin-worn globe.

3. It is used by Shakespeare emphatically for a man enormously wicked.

Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham.

TO SIN. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To neglect the laws of religion; to violate the laws of religion.

He shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death.

2. To offend against right.

I am a man
More sin-d against than sinning.

And who but wishes to invert the laws
Of order, *sin*s against th' eternal cause.

SINCER. adv. [formed by contraction from sithence, or sith thence, from siðe, Sax.]

1. Because that.
Since the clearest discoveries we have of other spirits, besides God and our own souls, are imparted by revelation, the information of them should be taken from thence.

Since truth and constancy are vain,
Since neither love, nor sense of pain,
Nor force of reason, can persuade,
Then let example be obey'd.

2. From the time that.

Am not I thine ass upon which thou hast ridden ever since I was thine unto this day?
He is the most improved mind since you saw him that ever was.

3. Ago; before this.
About two years since, it so fell out, that he was brought to a great lady's house.

Spies hold me in chace, that I was foretold
Thou or four miles about; esse had I, fir,
Half an hour since, brought my report.

A law was made no longer since than the twenty-eighth of Henry the Eighth.

How many ages since has Virgil writ!

SINCE. preposition. After; reckoning from some time past to the time present.

He since the morning hour set out from heaven

If such a man arise, I have a model by which he may build a nobler poem than any extant since the ancients.

SINCERE. adj. [sincerus, Lat. sincere, It.]

1. Unhurt; uninjured.
He tried a tough well chosen spear;
Th' inviolable body stood sincere.

2. Pure; unmingled.
Pardon my tears, 'tis joy which bids them flow,
A joy which never was sincere till now;

That which my conquest gave I could not prize,
Or 'twas imperfect, till I saw your eyes.

The pleasures of sense, beasts taste sincere and pure always, without mixture or alloy, without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them.

Animal substances differ from vegetable, in that, being reduced to ashes, they are perfectly insipid, and in that there is no sincere acid in any animal juice.

In English I would have all gellicious avoided, that our tongue may be sincere, and that we may keep to our own language.

3. Honest; undissembling; uncorrupt.

This top proud fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From sincere notions by intelligence

I do know to be corrupt.
Nor troubled at their tidings from the earth,
Which your sincerity care could not prevent;

Foretold so lately what would come to pass,
When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell.

The more sincere you are, the better it will fare with you at the great day of account. In the mean while, give us leave to be sincere too, in condemning heartily what we heartily disapprove.

Through the want of a sincere intention of pleasing God in all our actions, we fall into such irregularities of life as, by the ordinary means of grace, we should have power to avoid.

SINCERELY. adv. [from sincere.] Honestly; without hypocrisy; with purity of heart.

The purer and perfecter our religion is, the worthier effects it hath in them who stedfastly and sincerely embrace it.

That you may, fair lady,
Perceive I speak sincerely, the king's majesty
Does purpose honour to you.

In your whole reasoning, keep your mind sincerely intent in the pursuit of truth.

SINCERENESS. n. f. [Sincerité, French; Sincerity, from sincere.]

1. Honesty of intention; purity of mind.

Jesus Christ has purchased for us terms of reconciliation, who will accept of sincerity instead of perfection; but then this sincerity implies our honest endeavours to do our utmost.

2. Freedom from hypocrisy.

In thy constant cease to fear a foe;
For thee she feels sincerity of woe.

SINDON. n. f. [Lat.] A fold; a wrapper.

There were found a book and a letter, both written in fine parchment, and wrapped in sindon of linen.

SINE. n. f. [Sinus, Latin.] A right sine, in geometry, is a right line drawn from one end of an arch perpendicularly upon the diameter drawn from the other end of that arch; or it is half the chord of twice the arch.

Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio.

SINCE. n. f. [anc, without, and cure, care.] An office which has revenue without any employment.
A since is a benefice without cure of souls. Ayliffe.

No baiony nor since were known,
Nor would the bee work honey for the drone. Garth.
SINCE. n. f. [senpe, Saxon; senwen, Dutch.]

1. A tendon; the ligament by which the joints are moved.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews. Shakspeare
The routed fibres rose, and from the wound Black bloody drops disall'd upon the ground:
Mute and amaz'd, my hair with terror stood;
Iar shrink my sinews, and congeal'd my blood. Dryden.

A sinew cracked seldom recovers its former firmth. Locke

2. Applied to whatever gives strength or compactness: as, money is the sinews of war.

Some other sinews there are, from which that superfluity of strength in perfusion doth arise. Hooker.
Such discouraging of men in the ways of an active conformity to the church's rules, cracks the sinews of government; for it weakens and damps the spirits of the obedient. South.

In the principal figures of a picture, the painter is to employ the sinews of his art; for in them consists the principal beauties of his work. Dryden.

3. Muscle or nerve.

The feeling pow'r, which is life's root,
Through ev'ry living part itself doth shed
By sinews, which extend from head to foot;
And, like a net, all o'er the body spread. Davies.
To SINCE, v. a. [from the noun.] To knit as by sinews. Not in use.

Ourselves well sinewed to our defence. Shakspeare.

SINUSURUNK. adj. [sinew and shrunk.]

A horse is said to be sinusurunk when he has been over-ridden, and so fatigued that he becomes gaunt-bellied, by a stiffness and contraction of the two sinews which are under his belly. Farrier's Dict.

SINERY. adj. [from sinew.]

1. Consisting of a sinew; nervous. The nerves and sinews are in poetry often confounded, from nervus, Latin, which signifies a sinew.

The sinew thread my brain lets fall
Through ev'ry part,
Can tie those parts, and make me one of all. Donne.

2. Strong; nervous; vigorous; forcible.

And for thy vigour,
Ball-bearing Milo his addition yields
To sinewy Ajax. Shakspeare.

Worthy fellows, and like to prove Most sinewy swordsmen. Shakspeare.

The northern people are large, fair-complexioned, strong, sinewy, and courageous. Hale.

Faunting, as he reach'd the shore,
He dropt his sinewy arms: his knees no more

SINFUL. adj. [sin and full.]

1. Alien from God; not holy; unsanc-tified.

Drive out the sinful pair,
From hallow'd ground th' unholy. Milton.

2. Wicked; not observant of religion; contrary to religion. It is used both of persons and things.

Twice happy man, said then the father grave,
Whose sinful steps thy steady hand doth lead,
And shows the way his sinful soul to save,
Who better can the way to heaven arread. Fairy Qu.
Nature herself, though pure of sinful thought,
Wrought in her fo, that, seeing me, she turn'd. Milton.

The stocks looked upon all passions as sinful defects and irregularities, as so many deviations from right reason, making pathos to be only another word for perturbation. South.

SINFULLY. adv. [from sinful.] Wickedly; not piously; not according to the ordinance of God.

All this from my remembrance brutish wrath
Sinfully pluck'd, and not a man of you
Had so much grace to put it in my mind. Shakspeare.

The humble and contented man pleases himself innocently and easily, while the ambitious man attempts to please others sinfully and difficultly, and perhaps unsuccessfully too. South.

SINFULNESS. n. f. [from sinful.] Alienation from God; neglect or violation of the duties of religion; contrariety to religious goodness.

A lonely desert, and an empty land,
Shall scarce afford, for needful hours of rest,
A singular house to them benighted guest. Addison.

Where the poetry or history flows a singular reading is not sufficient to satisfy a mind that has a true taste; nor can we make the fullest improvement of them without proper reviews. Watts.

2. Particular; individual.

As no singular man is born with a right of controul-ing the opinions of all the rest, so the world has no title to demand the whole time of any particular person. Pope.

If one singular word were to express but one simple idea, and nothing else, there would be scarce any mistake. Watts.

3. Not compounded.

As simple ideas are opposed to complex, and singular ideas to compound, so propositions are distinguished.

the English tongue has some advantage above the learned languages, which have an usual word to distinguish single from simple. Warton

4. Alone; having no companion; having no assistant.

Servant of God, well hast thou fought
The better fight, who single hast maintain'd Against revolved multitudes the cause of truth. Milton

Mad after change, and desperate in their fates,
Wearied and gull'd with their necessities,
Durst have thought it? Ben Jonson.

Our foul, whole country's heav'n, and God her father,

Into this world, corruption's sink, is sent;
Yet so much in her travail the doth gather,
That she returns home sicker than she went. Donne.

SINKLESS. adj. [from sin.] Exempt from sin.

Led on, yet sinkless, with desire to know What nearer might concern him. Milton.

At that talked fruit
The sun, as from Thyeist an banquet, turn'd
His count intended; else how had the world
Inhabited, though sinkless, more than now Avoided punting cold, and sear-bright heat? Milton.

Internal ghosts and hellish furies round Environ'd thee; some howl'd, some yell'd, some struck'd.

Some bent at thee their fiery darts, while thou Satt'st unappall'd in calm and sinkless peace. Milton.

No thoughts like mine his sinkless soul profane,
Observant of the night. Dryden.

Did God, indeed, insist on a sinkless and unerring observance of all this multiplicity of duties; had the Christian dispensation provided no remedy for our lapses, we might cry out with Balaam, Alas!
who should live, if God did this? Rogers.

SINKLESSNESS. n. f. [from sinkless.] Ex- emption from sin.

We may the less admire at his gracious com-passions to those, the sinkless of whose condition will keep them from turning his vouchsafements into any thing but occasions of joy and gratitude. Boyle.

SINKER. n. f. [from sin.]

1. One at enmity with God; one not truly or religiously good.

Let the boldest sinker take this one consideration along with him, when he is going to sink, that whether the sink he is about to set ever comes to be pardoned or no, yet, as soon as it is set, it quite turns the balance, puts his salvation upon the venture, and makes it ten to one odds against him. South.

Never consider yourselves as persons that are to be seen, admired, and courted by men, but as poor sinkers, that are to save yourselves from the vanities and follies of a miserable world, by humility, detestation, and self-denial. T. au.

2. An offender; a criminal.

Speak on, sir,
I dare your worst objections: if I blush,
It is to see a nobleman want manners. Shakespeare
But, sir, be sudden in the execution;
Withal obdurate; do not let him plead. Shakespeare
Sir king,

This man is better than the man he slew. Shakespeare
At a banquet the ambassador did fire the wife men to deliver every one of them some sentence or parable, that he might report to his king, which they did.
only one was silent, which the ambassador, perceiving, said to him, Sir, let it not displease you; why do not you say somewhat that I may report? He answered, Report to your lord, that there are that can hold their peace. Bacon

2. The title of a knight or baronet. This word was anciently so much held essen-

Beneath the smould'ring sir-loin, stretch'd immense
From side to side. Thomson

It would be ridiculous, indeed, if a spit, which is strong enough to turn a sir-loin of beef, should not be able to turn a lark. Swift

SIRE. n. f. [sire, French; senior, Latin.]

1. A father. Used in poetry.

He, but a duke, would have his son a king,
And raise his issue like a loving sire. Shakespeare
A virgin is his mother, but his sire
Thy pow'r of the most High. Milton

And now I leave the true and just supports
Of legal princes and of honest courts,
Whole sires, great partners in my father's cares,
Saluted their young king at Hebrew crown'd. Prior Whether his hourly sire he spies,
While thousand grateful thoughts arise,
Or meets his spouse's fonder eye. Pope

2. It is used in common speech of beasts:
as, the horse had a good sire, but a bad dam.

3. It is used in composition: as, grand*sire*, great grand*sire*.

Towards father cowards, and base things sire
the base. Shakespeare

SIREN. n. f. [Latin.] A goddess who enticed men by singing, and devoured them; any mischievous alluring woman.

Oh train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
To drown me in thy siren's flood of tears:
Sing siren, to thyself, and I will dote;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie. Shakespeare

SIRIASIS. n. f. [siriasis.] An inflammation of the brain and its membrane, through an excessive heat of the sun.

Diff.

SERIAL. n. f. [Latin.] The dogstar.

SIROCCO. n. f. [Italian; syrrus ventus,
Latin.] The southeast or Syrian wind.

Forth rush the levand and the potent winds,
Eurus and Zephyr, with their lateral noise,
Sirocco and Libeccio. Milton

SIRRAH. n. f. [sir, ha! Minhew.] A compellation of reproach and insult.

Go, sirrah, to my cell;
Take with you your companions: as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely. Shakespeare Sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, or honesty in this bosom of thine. Shakespeare
It runs in the blood of your whole race, sirrah, to hate our family. Dr. Johnson
Greet how the goddess greets her son,
Come hither, sirrah; now begone. Prior

SIRUP. n. f. [Arabic.] The juice of vegetables boiled with sugar.

Shall I, whose ears her mournful words did seize,
Her words in my up laid of sweetest breath,
Relent. Sidney

Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy sirups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep,
Which thou owed'st yesterday. Shakespeare
And first, behold this cordial sirup here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds,
With spirits of balm, and fragrant sirups mixt. Milton

Those expressed juices contain the true essential salt of the plant: for if they be boiled into the consistence of a sirup, and set in a cool place, the essential salt of the plant will shoot upon the sides of the vessels. Arbutnot

SIRUPED. adj. [from sirup.] Sweet, like sirup; bedewed with sweets.

Yet when there hangs a honey fall,
We'll lick the sirup leaves:
And tell the bees that there is gall. Drayton

SIRUPY. adj. [from sirup.] Resembling sirup.

Apples are of a sirupy tenacious nature. Morthmer

SIRE. n. f. [contracted from qllise.]

a greenfinch.

SISTER. n. f. [syster, Saxon; zusler,
Dutch.]

1. A woman born of the same parents; correlative to brother.

Her sister began to scold. Shakespeare
I have said to corruption, thou art my father:
to the worm, thou art my mother and my sister. Joh

2. Woman of the same faith; a christian;
one of the same nature; human being.

If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of food, and you say unto them, Depart in peace, beyond warned and filled; notwithstanding, you give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? James

3. A female of the same kind.
He chid the sisters,
And bade them speak to him. Shakespeare

4. One of the same kind; one of the same condition.

The women, who would rather wrest the laws
Than let a sister-plaintiff lose the cause,
As judges on the bench more gracious are,
And more attent to brothers of the bar,
Cried, one and all, the suppliant should have right;
And to the grandame hag adjudg'd the knight. Dr. Johnson

There grew two olives, close of the grove,
With roots interwov'd, and branches interwove;
Alike their leaves, but not alike they fruit'd
With sister-fruits: one fertile, one was wild. Pope

SISTER. n. f. A husband or wife's sister.

Thy sister in law is gone back unto her people:
return thou after thy sister in law. Black

SISTERHOOD. n. f. [from sister.]

1. The office or duty of a sister.

She abhor'd
Her proper blood, and left to do the part Of sisterhood, to do that of a wife. Donne

2. A set of sisters.

3. A number of women of the same order.

I speak
Wishing a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votants of Saint Clare. Shakespeare

A woman who flourishes in her innocence, and is that spirit and rancour which prevails among her exasperated sisterhood, appears more amiable. Dr. Johnson SISTERLY. adj. [from sister.] Like a sister; becoming a sister.

After much debatement,
My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour,
And I did yield to him. Shakespeare

To SIT. v. n. preterit I sat. [sitan, Ger. thick; sittan, Saxon; sitten, Dutch.]

1. To rest upon the buttocks.
Their wives do sit beside them, carding wool. Mary's Hymn

Aloft, in awful state,
The godlike hero sit
On his imperial throne. Dryden

2. To perch.

All new fashions be pleasant to me,
I will have them whether I thrive or thee;
Now I am a frikker, all men on me look,
What should I do but sit cock on the hoop?
What do I care if all the world me foul,
I will have a garment reach to my tail. Bacon

3. To be in a state of rest, or idleness.
Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here? Numb

Why sit we here each other viewing idly. Milt

4. To be in any local position.
I should be still Plucking the grass, to know where sits the wind:
Peering in maps for ports. Shakespeare

Those Appointed to sit there had left their charge. Milt
The ships are ready, and the wind sits fair. J. Phillips

5. To rest as a weight or burden.

Your brother's death sits at your heart. Shakespeare
When God lets loose upon us a sickness, we fear to die, then the calamity sits heavy upon us. Taylor

To toss and sting, and to be restless, only galls our sores, and makes the burden that is upon us more uneasy. Tillotson

Fear, the last ofills, remain'd behind,
And horror heavy sits on every mind. Drake

Our whole endeavours are intent to get rid of the present evil, as the first necessary condition to our happiness. Nothing, as we passionately think, on equal the uneasiness that sits to heavy upon us. Locke

6. To fettle; to abide.

That this new comer, flame,
There sits not and reproach us. Milton
When Thetis bluish'd in purple not her own,
And from her face the breathing winds were blown
A sudden silence sits upon the sea,
And weeping oars with straggling urg'd their way. Dryden

He to the void advanc'd his pace;
Pale horror sits on each Arcadian face. Dryden

7. To brood; to incubate.

As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches not by right shall leave them in the midst of his days. Jeremiah
The egg laid, and fevered from the body of the hen, hath no more nourishment from the hen, but only a quickening heat when the sitteth. Bacon
She mistaketh a piece of chalk for an egg, and sits upon it in the same manner. Addison

8. To be adjusted; to be with respect to fitness or unfitness, decorum or indecorum.

This new and gorgeous garment, majesty,
Sits not so easily on me as you think. Shakespeare.

Be who by paths and indirect crook'd ways
Have crown'd me; and I myself know well,
How soon I shall descend with better quiet.

Your preferring that to all other considerations,
Does, in the eyes of all men, sit well upon you. Locke.

9. To be placed in order to be painted.

One is under no more obligation to extol every thing he finds in his author he translates, than a punter is to make every face that sits to him hand some. Guth.

10. To be in any situation or condition.

A farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he is at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he sits at great idleness. Bacon.

So, when all the church-lords were thrown up to the bar; would the tenants sit easier in their parsons' houses? Swift.

11. To be convened, as an assembly of a public or authoritative kind; to hold a session; as, the parliament sits; the last general council sat at Trent.

12. To be placed at the table.

Whether is greater, he that sits at meat, or he that serveth? Luke.

13. To exercise authority.

The judicium shall sit, and take away his dominion. Daniel.

Also ye that sit in judgment Judges.

Down to the golden Cherubim, or where The Persian in Babylon sits. Milton.

One council sits upon life and death, the other is of lives, and a third for the distributions of justice.

14. To be in any solemn assembly as a member.

Most ye fair ones, who in judgment sit,
You must out-empire over love and wit. Rowe.

15. To sit down. Down is little more than emphatical.

Go and sit down to meat. Luke.

When we sit down to our meal, we need not suffer of the intrusion of armed unwitted guests.

16. To sit down. To begin a siege.

Not a add the enemy have sit down before it,
if they had done their business in all other places.

Have register'd upon our brazen tombs;

19. To sit out. To be without engagement or employment.

They are glad, rather than sit out, to play very offensive, and to make use of arguments, such as valour, power, bare expediency. Sp. Spence.

20. To sit up. To rise from lying to sitting.

He that was dead, sat up, and began to speak.

21. To sit up. To watch; not to go to bed.

Be comely,
And cut down, and feast, sit up, and revel;

22. To sit up. To watch; not to go to bed.

And the great, the fair, and spotted dames
Come about thee, and begin a fashion
Of coiffures. Ben Jonson.

To sit. v. a.

1. To keep the seat upon.

Hardly the mule can sit the head strong horse,
Nor would she, if she could, check his impetuous force. Prior.

2. [When the reciprocal pronoun follows sit, it seems to be an active verb.] To place on a seat.

The happiest youth viewing his progress through
What perils past, what crosses to endure,
Would shut the book, and sit him down and die.

He came to visit us, and, calling for a chair, put him down, and we sat down with him. Bacon.

But not at rest or ease of mind,
They sit them down to weep. Milton.

3. To be settled to do business. This is rather neuter.

The court was sat before Sir Robert came, but the justices made room for the old knight at the head of them. Addison.

SITE, n. f. [situs, Lat.]

1. Situation; local position.

The city felt the strongly fortifies,
Three sides by site it well defended has. Footfall.

Manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environed the town site and temple. Bacon.

If we consider the heart in its constituent parts, we shall find nothing singular, but what is in many muscle. 'Tis only the site and posture of their several parts that give it the form and functions of a heart. Bentley.

Before my view appear'd a structure fair,
Its site uncertain, if on earth or air. Pope.

2. It is taken by Thomson for posture or situation of a thing, with respect to itself; but improperly.

And leaves the semblance of a lover fix'd
In melancholy site, with head declin'd,
And love-dejected eyes. Spring.

SITFAST, n. f. [sit and fast.] A hard knob growing under the saddle. F. Diet.

SITH, adv. [siðe, Saxon.] Since; seeing that. Obsolete.

What ceremony of colours used about the bodies of the dead! after which custom, notwithstanding, sit it was then customs, our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be retomb'd. Hooker.

I thank you for this profit, and from hence
I'll love no friend, sit love breeds such offence.

No incident in the piece or play but must carry on the main design; all things else are like straw gers to the hand, when nature can do her work with five.

That of five hath many respects in it, not only for the days of the creation, but its natural consecration, as being a perfect number.

SIX and seven, n. f. To be at six and seven, is to be in a state of disorder and confusion. A ludicrous expression that has been long in use.

All is uneven,
And every thing is left at six and seven. Shakespeare.
In 1598 there was in the see of Rome a fierce thundering friar, that would not let all at six and seven, or at five and five, if you allude to his name. Bacon.

What blunder bargain ere was drawn,
Or wager laid at six and seven. Shakespeare.
John once turned his mother out of doors, to his great sorrow; for his affairs went on at six and seven.

The goddess would no longer wait
But, rising from her chair of state,
Left all below at six and seven,
Harnessed her doves, and flew to heaven. Swift.

SIXPENCE, n. f. [six and pence.] A coin; half a shilling.

Where have you left the money that I gave you?
Ob!—sixpence that I had. Shakespeare.

The wisest man might blunder,
If he lov'd sixpence more than honey. Pope.
SIXSCORE, n. adj. [six and score.] Six times twenty.

Sixscore and five miles it containeth in circuit.

The crown of Spain hath enlarged the bounds thereof within this last sixscore years, much more than the Ottomans. Bacon.

SIXTEEN, n. adj. [sixtyne, Saxon.] Six and ten.

It returned the voice thirteen times; and I have heard of others that it would utter sixteen times. Bacon.

If men lived but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about sixteen or eighteen. Taylor.

SIXTEENTH, adj. [sixteen, Saxon.] The sixth after the tenth; the ordinal of sixteen.

The first lot came forth to Jehoiarib, the sixteenth to Immer. 1 Chronicles.

SIXTH, adj. [sixta, Saxon.] The first after the fifth; the ordinal of six.

You are more clement than vile men,
Who of their broken debtors take

A sixth, letting them thrive again. Shakespeare.

There succeeded to the kingdom of England James the sixth, then king of Scotland. Bacon.

SIXTH, n. f. [from the adjective.] A sixth part.

Only the other half would have been a tolerable feat for rational creatures, and five sixths of the whole globe would have been rendered useless. Chiquet.

SIXTHLY, adv. [from six.] In the sixth place.

Sixthly, living creatures have more diversity of organs than plants. Bacon.

SIXTIETH, adj. [sixte, Saxon.] The tenth six times repeated; the ordinal of sixty.

Let the appearing circle of the fire be three feet diameter, and the time of one entire evolution of it the sixtieth part of a minute, in a whole day there will be but 86,400 such parts. Digby.

SIXTY, adj. [sixty, Saxon.] Six times ten.

When the boats were come within sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, and could go no farther. Bacon.

Of which 7 times 9, or the year 63, is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown.

SIZE, n. f. [perhaps rather cise, from incise, Lat. or from ajise, Fr.]

1. Bulk; quantity of superficies; comparative magnitude.

I ever verified my friends,
With all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer.

If any decay'd ship be new made, it is more fit to make her size less than bigger.

The distance just of size of every size,
The haddock's touch, the pond'rous ball expires.

Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.

The martial goddess,
Like thee, Telemachus, in voice and size,
With speed divine, from street to street she flies.

2. [ajise, old Fr.] A settled quantity. In the following passage it seems to signify the allowance of the table: whence they say a size at Cambridge.

'Tis not in thee
To cut off my size, to scant my size.
And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt Against my coming in. Shakespeare.

3. Figurative bulk; condition. This agrees too in the contempt of men of a less size and quality.

They do not consider the difference between elaborate discourses, delivered to princes or parliaments, and a plain sermon, for the middling or lower size of people.

4. [ajisa, Italian.] Any viscous or glutinous substance.

TO SIZE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adjust or arrange according to size. The foxes weigh the geese they carry.

And, ere they venture on a stream,
Know how to size themselves and them. Hudibras.

Two troops of match'd were never to be found,
Such bodies built for strength, of equal age.

2. [from ajise.] To settle; to fix. There was a statute for disordering the standard of the exchequer throughout England; thereby to size weights and measures.

3. To cover with glutinous matter; to be linear with size.

SIZED, adj. [from size.] Having a particular magnitude.

What my love is, proof hath made you know;
And as my love is fixed, my fear is so. Shakespeare.

That will be a great horse to a Westman, which is but a small one to a Fleming; having, from the different breed of their countries, taken several fixed ideas, to which they compare their great and their little.

SIZABLE, adj. [from size.] Reasonably bulky; of just proportion to others.

He should be purged, twented, vomited, and starved, till he come to a sizable bulk. Arbutnot.

SIZER or SERVITOR, n. f. A certain rank of students in the universities.

They make a scramble for degree:
Masters of all sorts and of all ages,
Keepers, sub-jifiers, lackeys, pages. Bishop Corbet.

SIZERS, n. f. See SCISSARS.

A buttrice and pincers, a hammer and malle.

An apron and sizers for head and for tale. Tuff.

SIZINESS, n. f. [from size.] Glutinousness; viscosity.

In rheumatism, the size passes off thick contents in the urine, or glutinous sweats.

Cold is capable of producing a siziness and viscosity in the blood. Arbutnot.

SIZY, adj. [from size.] Viscous; glutinous.

The blood is sizy, the alkalescent salts in the serum producing concretes concretions. Arbutnot.

SKADULE, n. f. [scadulle, Saxon, scath is harm; thence scathle, scaddle.] Hurt; damage.

SKADONS, n. f. The embryos of bees.

SKAT'NIMATE, n. f. [I suppose from scath, or scap, a knife, and mate.] A meddler. It is remarkable that scat, Dutch, is a knife.

Scurvy knave, I am none of his skit gills;
I am none of his skat'nimates. Shakespeare.

SKATE, n. f. [scabba, Sax.]

1. A flat sea fish.

2. A sort of shoe armed with iron, for sliding on the ice.

On sounding skates a thousand different ways,
In circling poise swift as the skates. Thompson.

SKEAN, n. f. [Irish and Erse; scagene, Sax.] A short sword; a knife.

Any disposed to do mischief may under his mantle privily carry his head piece, skan, or pistol, to be always ready.

The Irish did not fail in courage or fierceness, being only armed with darts and skenes, it was rather an execution than a fight upon them. Bacon.

SKEG, n. f. A wild plum.

SKEGGER, n. f.

Little salmon, called skeggars, are bred of such sick salmon that might not go to the sea; and though they abound, yet never thrive to any greatness.

SKEIN, n. f. [escagne, Fr.] A knot of thread or silk wound and doubled.

Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skien of fly'd silk, thou tatter'd prodigal's purse?

Our file should be like a skien of silk, to be bound by the right thread, not unravelled or perplexed. Then all is a knot, a heap.

Besides, so lazy a brain as mine is, grows soon weary when it has to entangle a skien as this to unwind.

SKELETON, n. f. [σκελετος.]

1. [In anatomy.] The bones of the body preserved together as much as can be in their natural situation.

When rattling bones together fly,

From the four corners of the fly,
When skews o'er the skeletons are spread,
Those cloth'd with flesh, and life inspires the dead.

Though the patient may from other causes be exceedingly emaciated, and appear as a ghastly skeleton, covered only with a dry skin, yet nothing but the ruin and destruction of the lungs denotes a consumption.

I thought to meet, as late as heav'n might grant,
A skeleton, ferocious, tall, and gaunt,
Whose loose teeth in their naked sockets shook,
And grinn'd terrific, a Sardinian look.

2. The compages of the principal parts.

The great structure itself, and its great interparts, the heavenly and elementary bodies, are bound in such a position and situation, the great skels of the world.

The schemes of any of the arts or sciences may be analyzed in a sort of skeleton, and represented upon tables, with the various dependencies of the several parts.

SKELLUM, n. f. [skelm, German.] A villain; a scoundrel.

SKEP, n. f. [scaphen, lower Saxon, to draw.]

1. A sort of basket, narrow at the bottom, and wide at the top, to fetch corn in.

A putchforke, a doongforke, wever, skop, and a tebin.

2. In Scotland, the repositories where the bees lay their honey is still called skop.

SKEPTICK, n. f. [scaptilis; scaptique, Fr.] One who doubts, or pretends to doubt, of every thing.

Bring the cause unto the bar; whose authority none must disclaim, and least of all those scap in religion.

Survey Nature's extended face, then scaptique lay.

Dark wide field of wonders can you find No art?

With too much knowledge, for the sceptic's side,
With too much weakness for the stoic's pride,
Men hang between.

The dogmatist is sure of every thing, and the sceptic believes nothing.

SKEPTICAL. adj. [from skeptick.] Doubtful; pretending to universal doubt.

May the Father of mercies confirm the skeptical and wavering minds, and so prevent us, that stand fall, in all our doings, and further us with his continual help.

SKEPTICISM. n. f. [Scepticism, French; from skeptick.] Universal doubt; pretence or profession of universal doubt.

I had by my natural diffidence and scepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatick way.

SKETCH. n. f. [schedula, Lat.] An outline; a rough draught; a first plan.

I shall not attempt a character of his present majesty, having already given an imperfect sketch of it.

As the lightest sketch, if justly trac'd,
Is by all colouring but the more disgrac'd,
So by false learning is good sense defac'd.

TO SKETCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To draw, by tracing the outline.

If a picture is daubed with many glaring colours, the vulgar eye admires it; whereas he judges very contemptuously of some admirable design sketched out only with a black pencil, though by the hand of Raphael.

2. To plan, by giving the first or principal notion.

The reader I'll leave in the midst of silence, to contemplate those ideas which I have only sketch- ed, and which every man must finish for himself.

SKEWER. n. f. [kere, Danish.] A wooden or iron pin, used to keep meat in form.

Sweetbreads and collops were with skewers prick'd about the sides.

Once may overlook
A skewer sent to table by a cook.

From his skewer the skewer he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes.
Send up meat well stick with skewers, to make it look round; and an iron skewer, when rightly employed, will make it look handsome.

TO SKEWER. v. a. [from the noun.] To strew with skewers.

SKIFF. n. f. [sciffe, Fr. scapha, Latin.] A small light boat.

In two skiffs of cork a loadstone and steel be placed within the orb of their activities, the one doth move, the other standing still; but both decr-ase each other.

In a poor skiff he pass'd the bloody main,
Chok'd with the slaughter'd bodies of his train.

On Garrway cliffs
A savage race, by shipwreck fed,
Lie waiting for the founder'd skiff,
And strip the bodies of the dead.

SKILLFUL. adj. [Skill and full.] Knowing; qualified with skill; possessing any art; dexterous; able. It is, in the following examples, used with of, at, and in, before the subject of skill. Of seems poetical, of ludicrous, in popular and proper.

His father was a man of Tyre, skillful to work in gold and silver.

They shall call the husbandmen to mourning, and such as are skillful of lamentation, to wailing.

Will Vicer be skillful at finding out the ridiculous element of a thing, and placing it in a new light.

Say, Stella, feel you no content;
Rushing on a life well spent;
Your skillful hand employ'd to save Spiriting wretches from the grave;
And then supporting with your store
Those whom you drag'd from death before.

More that I may call men than you;
How skillful are ahead of skillful of.

He must be very little skilled in the world, who thinks that a valuable tongue shall accompany only
a good understanding.

SKILLLESS. adj. [from skill.] Wanting skill; artless. Not in use.

Nor have I seen
More that I may call men than you;
How skillful are ahead of skillful of.

Instructors should not only be skillful in those sciences which they teach; but have skill in the method of teaching, and patience in the practice.

SKILLFULLY. adv. [from skillful.] With skill; with art; with uncommon ability; dexterously.

As soon as he came near me, in the distance, with much fury, but with fury skillfully guided, he ran upon me.

Ulysses builds a ship with his own hands, as skillfully as a shipwright.

SKILLFULNESS. n. f. [from skillful.] Art; ability; dexterity.

He fed them according to the integrity of his heart, and guided them by the skillfulness of his hands.

SKILL. n. f. [skil, Islandick.]

1. Knowledge of any practice or art; readiness in any practice; knowledge; dexterity; artfulness.

Skill in the weapon is nothing without sack.

You have
As little skill to fear, as I have purpose
To put you to't.

OR nothing profits more
Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,
Well manag'd; of that skill the more thou know'st,
The more she will acknowledge thee her head.

I will from wondrous principles obtain
A race unlike the first, and try my skill again.

Phocion the Athenian general, then ambassador from the state, by his great wisdom and skill at negotiations, diverted Alexander from the conquest of Athens, and restored the Athenians to his favour.

Any particular art.
Learned in one skill, and in another kind of learning unskillful.

TO SKILL. v. n. [skilia, Islandick.]

1. To be knowing in; to be dexterous at; with of.

They that skill not of heavenly matter,
All that they know not, envy or admire.

The overseers were all that could skill of instruments of music.

One man of wisdom, experience, learning, and direction, may judge better in those things that he can skill of; than ten thousand others that be ignorant.

2. [skilia, Islandick, signifies to distinguish.] To differ; to make difference; to interest; to matter. Not in use.

Whether the commandments of God in scripture be general or special, it skilleth not.

What skill it, if a bag of stones or gold about thy neck do drown thee; raise thy head, Take stars for money; stars not to be told
By any art; yet to be purchas'd.

None is so wasteful as the scraping dame;
She loseth three for one; her soul, roll, fame.

He intending not to make a summer business of it, but a resolute war, without term prefixed, until he had recovered France, it skill'd not much when he began the war, especially having Calais at his back where he might winter.

SKILLED. adj. [from skill.] Knowing; dexterous; acquainted with; with of poetically, with in popularly.

thinks that a valuable tongue shall accompany only
a good understanding.

SKILLLESS. adj. [from skill.] Wanting skill; artless. Not in use.

Nor have I seen
More that I may call men than you;
How skillful are ahead of skillful of.

He must be very little skilled in the world, who thinks that a valuable tongue shall accompany only
a good understanding.

SKILLFULLY. adv. [from skillful.] With skill; with art; with uncommon ability; dexterously.

As soon as he came near me, in the distance, with much fury, but with fury skillfully guided, he ran
upon me.

Ulysses builds a ship with his own hands, as skillfully as a shipwright.

SKILLFULNESS. n. f. [from skillful.] Art; ability; dexterity.

heart, and guided them by the skillfulness of his hands.

SKILL. n. f. [skil, Islandick.]

1. Knowledge of any practice or art; readiness in any practice; knowledge; dexterity; artfulness.

Skill in the weapon is nothing without sack.

You have
As little skill to fear, as I have purpose
To put you to't.

OR nothing profits more
Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,
Well manag'd; of that skill the more thou know'st,
The more she will acknowledge thee her head.

I will from wondrous principles obtain
A race unlike the first, and try my skill again.

Phocion the Athenian general, then ambassador
from the state, by his great wisdom and skill at negotiations, diverted Alexander from the conquest
of Athens, and restored the Athenians to his favour.

Any particular art.
Learned in one skill, and in another kind of
learning unskillful.

TO SKILL. v. n. [skilia, Islandick.]

1. To be knowing in; to be dexterous at; with of.

Jealously what might baffle your travel,
Being skilful in their parts, which to a stranger, Unguided and unattended, often prove Rough and unprofitable.

They will that ornament to shape and love,
Mishapen in the conduct of them both,
Like powder in a skillet soldier's tank
Is set on fire.

SKILLET. n. f. [escuglette, Fr.] A small kettle or boiler.

When light wind'd toys
Of feather'd Cupid sail with wanton dullness
My speculative and oft'd instruments,
Let house-wives make a skillet of my helm,
And all midday and bade adjectives
Make head against my estimation.

Break all the way, and in a skillet set it over a soft fire.

SKILT. n. f. [a word used by Chaucer, and of which I know not either the etymology or meaning.]

Sherry must I ha' what art?
Synack? or Arabick? or Welsh? What skilt?
Ape all the bracklayers that Babel built.

TO SKIL. v. a. [properly to scum, from scum; escume, French.]

1. To clear off from the upper part, by passing a vessel a little below the surface.

My cow skil, or his cow Mary,
Who hold the plough or skil the dairy,
My favorite books and pictures tell.

2. To take by skimming.

She tol'd in kettles mult of wine, and skims
With leaves the dregs that overflow the brims.
His principal studies were after the works of Titian, whose cream he has skimmed.

The surface of the sea is covered with its bubbles, while it rises, which they skim off into their boats, and afterwards separate in pots.

Whilome I've seen her skim the clotted cream,
And press from skims the milky stream.

3. To brush the surface slightly; to pass very near the surface.

Nor touch an air her humble flight to raise,
Content to skim the surface of the seas.

The swallow skims the river's wat'ry face.
A winged eastern blast just skimming o'er
The ocean's brow, and sinking on the shore.

4. To cover superficially. Improper.

Perhaps originally skim.
Dang'rous that in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land.

And seamen with dissembled depths betray.

TO SKIM. v. n. To pass lightly; to glide along.

Thin airy shapes o'er the furrows rise,
A dreadful scene! and skim before his eyes.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,
The line too labours, and the words move slow;
Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main.

Such as have active spirits, who are ever skimming
over the surface of things with a volatile spirit, will be nothing in their memory.

They skim over a science in a very superficial survey, and never lead their disciples into the depths of it.

SKIMBLESCAMBLE. adj. [a cant word formed by reduplication from scamble.]
Wandering; wild.

This is skin, and therefore it shall go. King
SKIN, n. f. [kind, Danish.]

1. The natural covering of the flesh. It consists of the cuticle, outward skin, or sear-skin, which is thin and insensible; and the cutis, or inner skin, extremely sensible.

The body is confined to nothing, the skin feeling rough and dry like leather.

The priest on skins of offerings takes his ease,
And nightly visions in his flamber fees. Dryden.

2. Hide; pelt; that which is taken from animals to make parchment or leather.

On what top he throw'd

A wilde goat's thaggy skin; and then he bow'd
His own couch on it. Shakespeare.

3. The body; the person: in luch speech.

We meet with many of these dangerous civilities, wherein 'tis hard for a man to save both his skin and his credit. L'Estrange.

4. A hulk.

TO SKIN, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To flay; to strip or divest of the skin.

The beavers run to the door to make their escape, are there entangled in the nets, seized by the Indians, and immediately skinned. Edwards.

SKINK, n. f. [preenc, Saxon.]

1. Drink; any thing potable.

2. Pottage.

Scotch skin, which is a pottage of strong nourishment, made with the knees and sinews of beef,
but long boiled: jelly also of knuckles of veal.
Bacon.

TO SKINK, v. n. [preencan, Saxon.] To serve drink. Both noun and verb are wholly obsolete.

SKINKER, n. f. [from skin.] One that serves drink.

Give thee this penny worth of fugar, clapt even now into my hand by an under skinker, one that never spoke other English in his life, than eight shillings and six-pence, and you are welcome, sir.
Shakespeare.

Hang on all the poor hop-drinkers,
Cries old Sym, the king of skinkers. Bru Torkin.

His mother took the cup the clown had hid d;
The reconciler bowl went round the board,
Which, emptied, the rude skinker still restor'd.
Dryden.

SKINKER, n. f. [from skin.] Having skin.

When the ulcer becomes foul, and discharges a muddy ichor, the edges in process of time tuck up,

Open her skinny lips. Shakespeare.

Let the aperture of these cartilages of the windpipe should hurt the gullet, which is tender, and of a skinny substance, these annular gristles are not made round; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way. Ray.

His fingers meet

In skinny films, and shape his ousy feet. Addison.

TO SKIP, v. n. [squittire, Italian; esquiver, Fr. I know not whether it may not come, as a diminutive, from scape.]

1. To fetch quick bounds; to pounce by quick leaps; to bound lightly and joyfully.

Was not Israel a derision unto thee? Was he found among thieves? For, since thou spakest of him, thou skippedst for joy. Jeremiah.

The queen, bound with love's powerful charin,
Sat with Pigeon arm in arm;

Her merry mind, that thought no harm,
About the robin were skipping. Drayton.

At four or five he merrily skipt,
Or mended pace, then Spinnard whipt. Hudibras.

The earth-born race
O'er every hill and verdant pasture stray,
Skip o'er the law, and by the rivers play. Blackm.

John skipped from room to room, ran up stairs and down stairs, peeping into every cranny. Abath.

Thus each hand promotes the pleasing pain,
And quick sensations skip from vein to vein. Pope.

The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day;
Had he thy reason would he skip and play? Pope.

2. To SKIP over. To pass without notice.

Pope thus it was wont to say, that the former popes did wisely to let the lawyers at-work to debate, whether the donation of Constantine the Great to Sylvester of St. Peter's patrimony were good or valid in law or no; the better to skip over the matter in fact, whether there was ever any such thing at all or no. Bacon.

A gentleman made it a rule, in reading, to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. Swift.

TO SKIP, v. a. [esquiver, French.]

1. To miss; to pass.

Let not thy sword skip one;

Pity not honour'd age for his white beard;
He is an usurer. Shakespeare.

They who have a mind to see the issue, may skip these two chapters, and proceed to the following.
Burnett.

2. In the following example skip is active or neuter, as over is thought an adverb or preposition.

Although to engage very far in such a metaphysical speculation were unfit, when I only endeavour to expatiate fluidly, yet we dare not quite skip it over, lest we be accused of overlooking it. Boyle.

SKIP, n. f. [from the verb.] A light leap or bound.

He looked very curiously upon himself, sometimes fetching a little skip, as it he had said his strength had not yet forsaken him. Sidney.

A dainty damsel, dressing of her hair,
By whom a little skipper floating did appear. F. Qu.

SKIRMISH, n. f. [from to skirmish, Fr., the shout of war; whence, skarm, and sgarmes, old British words. Moss a new sgarmes a whan, says an ancient writer, Esformouch, French.]

1. A slight fight; less than a set battle.

One battle, yes, a skirmish more there was
With adverse fortunes fought by Cartimund;
Her subjects most revolt. Ph. Lp.

2. A contest; a contention.

There is a kind of merry skarm betwixt skarm Benedick and her: they never meet but there is a skirmish of wit. Shakespeare.

These skirmishes expire not with the first pro-pugnacity of the opinions: they perhaps begin as single duellers; but then they soon have their partisans and abettors, who not only enhance, but entail the feud to posterity. Decca J. P. v.

TO SKIRMISH, v. n. [esformouch, Fr., from the noun.] To fight loosely; to fight in parties before or after the close of the main battle.

Ready to charge, and to retire at will;
Though broken, scatter'd, fled, they skirmish fight. Ingles.

gold and outs, side sleeves and parts, round in borne with a bluish tinsel. Shakespeare.

As Samuel turned about to go away, he laid upon the skirt of his mantle and it rent. 1 Samuel.

2. The edge of any part of the dress.

A narrow lace, or a small part of ruffled linen,
which runs along the upper part of the waist, fore, and crosses the breast, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-piece. J. Wadth.

3. Edge; margin; border; extreme part.

He should seat himself at Athos, upon the of that unquiet country. Spenser.

Ye muses, that rise
From bill or teaming lake, dusky or grey,
Till the tun paint your fleecy skirts with gold.

In honour to the world's great Author rise, Moss
Though I fled him angry, yet recall'd
To life prolong'd, and promised race, I now Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts.

Of glory, and far off his steps adore. Ingles.

The northern skirts that join to Syria have entered into the conquests or commerce of the great empires; but that which seems to have secured the other is, the strong and sandy through which no army can pass. Taylor.

Upon the skirts
Of Arragon our squander'd troops he rallies brd

TO SKIRT, v. a. [from the noun.] To border; to run along the edge.

Temple skirteth this hundred on the waste br

moats at their betters, and afterwards seren'd them from punishment. Spectator.
The scales, of which the fear-skin is composed,

are designed to fence the orifices of the secretory ducts of the military glands, and to seren the nerves from external injuries. Cheyne.

SKUE. adj. [Of this word there is found no satisfactory derivation.] Oblique; fidelong. It is most used in the adverb skue.

Several have imagined that this skue posture of the axis is a most unfortunate thing; and that if the poles had been erect to the plane of the eccli-ptick, all mankind would have enjoyed a very paradise. Benet.

To SKULK. v. n. To hide; to lurk in fear or malice.

Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and skulk'd away. Dryden.

While publick good aloft in pomp they wield,
And private interest skulk'd behind the shield. Young.

SKULL. n. f. [kiola, Islandick; skalli, Islandick, a head.]

1. The bone that envelopes the head: it is made up of several pieces, which, being join'd together, form a considerable cavity, which contains the brain as in a box, and it is proportionate to the big-ness of the brain. Quincy.

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in form of eyes, reflecting gnomes. Shaksp.
With redoubled strokes he plies his head;
But drives the butter'd skull within the brains. Dryden.

2. [people, Saxon, a company.] A thoul.

SKY. n. f. [ky, Danish.]

1. The region which surrounds this earth beyond the atmosphere. It is taken for the whole region without the earth.
The mountains their broad backs upheave
Into the clouds, their tops attend the sky. Milton.
The maids of Argos, who with frantic cries,
And imitated howlings, fill'd the skies. Reverend.
Raise all thy winds, with night involve the skies. Dryden.

2. The heavens.

The thunderer's bolt, you know,
Sky plants'd, butters all rebellious comets. Shaksp.
What is this knowledge but the sky told us,
For which the thief still cham'd in ice doth sit? Dante.

Wide is the fronting gate, and, rais'd on high,
With adamantine columns threatens the sky. Dryden.

3. The weather; the climate.

Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies. Shakespeare.

We envy not the warmer clime, that lies
In ten degrees of more indulgent skies;
Nor at the extremes of our heav'n regime,
Though o'er our heads the frozen Pleiads shine. Addison.

SKY'LY. adj. [from ky.] Not very elegantly furnished.] Ethereal.

A breath of art,
Serve to all the sky's influences,
That do this habitation, where thou keep'st, Humbly assist. Shakespeare.

SKY'COLOUR. n. f. [ky and colour.] An azure colour; the colour of the sky.

A solution as clear as water, with only a light touch of sky-colour, but nothing near so high as the ceruleous tincture of silver. Boyle.

SKY'COLOURED. adj. [ky and colour.]
Blue; azure like the sky.

Thus your Ovid himself has hinted, when he tells us that the blue water-nymphs are dressed in sky-coloured garments. Addison.

SKY'PIED. adj. [Ay and die.] Coloured like the sky.

There sky'd, a purple hue discolors. Pope.
SKY'ED. adj. [from ky.] Enveloped by the skies. This is unauthorized and inelegant.

The pale deluge floats
O'er the sky'd mountain to the shadowy vale. Thomson.

SKY'ISH. adj. [from ky.] Coloured by the ether; approaching the sky.

Of this flat a mountain you have made,
T' o'erstop old Pithon, or the sky'ish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare.

SKY LARK. n. f. [ky and lark.] A lark that mounts and sings.

He next proceeded to the sky's, mounting up by a sky's of notes, and afterwards falling down with a very easy descent. Spectator.

SKY'LIGHT. n. f. [ky and light.] A window placed in a room, not laterally, but in the ceiling.

A monstrous fowl dropped through the sky's, near his wife's apartment. Johnson and Pope.

SKY'ROCKET. n. f. [ky and rocket.] A kind of firework, which flies high, and burns as it flies.

I co-fidenc'd a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a sky'rocket discharged by an hand that is almighty. Addison.

SL. n. f.

1. A puddle. Anticorinth.

2. A plane of stone: as, a marble slab.

SLAB. adj. [a word, I suppose, of the same original with slacker, or slacer.] Thick;
viscous; glutinous.

Note of Lark, and Lark's lip;
Finger of butch-frang, led babe,
Duch-delivered by a slab. Shakespeare.

In the cure of an ulcer, with a moist but mucous, slabby and greasy medicament are to be used,
and drying to be used. Wegman.

2. Wet; doody: in low language.

When slabby boys the fluted below ply,
To rid the slabby pavements, pat not by. Gay.

SLACK. adj. [placc, Saxon; slacken, Islandick; gylack, Welsh; lucus, Latin.]

1. Not tense; not hard drawn: loose.

The vein in the arm is that which, because it commonly opens, and he gives a particular name to this case, to make a slack compulsion. For fear of exciting a convulsion. Johnson.

2. Relaxed; weak; not holding fast.

Ad his joints relax'd:
From his slack hand the god and wreath'd for Eve
Down dropp'd, and all the faded roses shed. Milton.

3. Remiss; not diligent; not eager; not fervent.
Thus much help and furtherance more yielded, in that, if to be our zeal and devotion to God we be slack, the slowness and fervour of others serve as a present spur. Hooler.

Seeing his soldiers slack and timorous, he re-proved them of cowardice and treason. Knollys
Nor were it just, would he refuse that flag,
That slack devotion should his thunder scape.
Waller

Rebellion now began, for lack
Of zeal and plunder, to grow slack. Hudibras

4. Not violent; not rapid.

Their pace was formal, grave, and slack;
His nimble wit outran the heavy pack. Dryden

5. Not intense.

A handful of slack dried hops spoil many pounds, by taking away their pleasant smell. Mortimer

To SLACK. } v. n. [from the adjective.]

To SLACKEN. }

1. To be remiss; to neglect.

When thou shalt vow a vow unto the Lord,
slack not to pay it. Deuteronomy

2. To lose the power of cohesion.

The fire, in lime burnt, lies hid, so that it appears to be cold; but water excites it again, whereby it slacks and crumbles into fine powder. Mozon

3. To abate.

Whence these raging fires
Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames. Milton

4. To languish; to fail; to flag.

To SLACK. } v. a.

To SLACKEN. }

1. To loosen; to make less tight.

Ah! generous youth, that with forbear;
Slack all thy sails, and fear to come. Dryden

Had Ajax been employ'd, our slacken'd sails
Had still at Aulis wanted happy gales. Dryden

2. To relax; to remit.

This makes the pulser beat, and lungs respire;
This holds the sinews like a bridle's rein;
And makes the body to advance, retire,
To turn, or stop, as she them slacks or strains. Darwin

Taught power's due use to people and to kings, Taught not to slack nor strain its tender strings. Pope

3. To ease; to mitigate.

Philips seems to have used it by mistake for flake.
Men, having been brought up at home under a strict rule of duty, always restrained by sharp penalties from lewd behaviour, so soon as they come thirther, where they see laws more loosely tended, and the hard restraint which they were used unto now slack'd, they grow more loose. Spenser

If there be cure or charm
To respite, or deceive, or slack the pain
Of this ill mansion. Milton

On our account has Jove,
Indulgent, to all noons some facetious plant
Allow'd, that poor helpless man might slack
His present thirst, and matter had for toil. Philips

4. To remit for want of earnestness.

My guards
Are you, great powers, and th' unbated strength
Of a firm conscience; which shall arm each step
Th' en for the state, and teach me slack no pace. Ben Jonson

With such delay well pleas'd, they slack their come. Milton

5. To cause to be remitted; to make to abate.

You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower than make him stand still. Bacon

This doctrine must supersede and slack on all industly and endeavour, which is the lowest degree of that which hath been promised to be accepted by Christ; and leave nothing to us to deliberate or attempt, but only to obey our fate. Hammond

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wife man's counsellor, if fortune; more up
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise. Milton

Balls of this metal slack'd Atlanta's pace,
And on the anxious youth bestow'd the race. Waller

One concludes to the poet's aim, which he is driving on in every line: the *slack*ness his pace, and diverts him from his way. Dryden

6. To relieve; to unbend.

Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chase by all the flow'r
Of youth, whose hopes a nobler prey devour. Denham

7. To withhold; to use less liberally.

He that so generally is good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance. Shakespeare

8. To crumble; to deprive of the power of cohesion.

Some unslack'd lime cover with ashes, and let it stand till rain comes to slack the lime; then spread them together. Mortimer

9. To neglect.

Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
From those that the calls servants, or from mine:
If then they chanc'd to slack ye,
We could controul them. Shakespeare

This good chance, that thus much favour'd,
He slacks not. Daniel

Slack not the good preface, while heav'n inspires
Our minds to dare, and gives the ready fires. Dryden

10. To repress; to make less quick or forcible.

I should be griev'd, young prince, to think my preference
Unbent your thoughts, and slacken'd 'em to arms. Addison

SLACK. n. f. [from the verb.] Small coal; coal broken in small parts: as slack'd lime turns to powder.

SLACKLY. adv. [from slack.]
1. Loosely; not tightly; not closely.

2. Negligently; remissly.

That a king's children should be so convey'd,
So slackly guarded, and the search to slow
That could not trace them. Shakespeare

SLACKEN. n. f. [from slack.]
1. Looseness; not tightness.

2. Negligence; inattention; remissness.

It concerneth the duty of the church by law to provide, that the looseness and slackness of men may not cause the commandments of God to be unexecuted. Hooker

These thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behind-hand slackness. Shakespeare

From man's effeminate slackness it begins,
Who should better hold his place
By wisdom, and superior gifts receiv'd. Milton

3. Want of tendency; tardiness.

When they have no disposition to shoot out above their lips, there is a slackness to heal, and a cure is very difficultly effected. Sharp

4. Weakness; not force; not intenseness.

Through the slackness of motion, or long banishment from the air, it might gather some aptness to putrefy. Brewster

SLAG. n. f. The dross or recrement of metal.

Not only the calces but the glasses of metal may be of differing colours from the natural colour of the metal, as I have observed about the glass of slag of copper. Boyle

SLAVE. n. f. A weaver's reed. Ainslie

SLAIN. The participle passive of slay.

The slain of the Lord shall be many. Isaiah

The king grew vain,
Fought all his battles o'er again;
And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew
the slain. Dryden

To SLAKE. v. a. [from slack, Skinner;
from slack, Islandick, to quench, Lyc.]

1. To quench; to extinguish.

He did always strive Himself with talves to health for to restore,
And slake the heavenly fire that rag'd evermore. Spenser

If I dig'd up thy fathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease thy heart. Shakespeare

She with her cold hand slakes
His spirits, the sparks of life, and chills his heart. Crofton

From Islands head
A lambent flame arose, which gently spread Around his brows, and on his temples fell;
Amaz'd, with running water we prepare
To quench the sacred fire, and slake his hair. Dryden

The fragrant fruit from bending branches slakes
And with the chrysal stream their thirst at pleasure slake. Blackmore

Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the chase, Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst. Adams

2. It is used of lime: so that it is uncertain whether the original notion of To slack or slake lime, be to powder or quench it.

That which he saw happened to be fresh lime and gathered before any rain had fallen to slake it. Woodward

To SLAKE. v. n. [This is apparently from slack.]

1. To grow less tense; to be relaxed.

If the the body's nature did partake,
Her strength would with the body's strength decay
But when the body's strongest sinews slake,
Then is the soul most active, quick, and gay. Darwin

2. To go out; to be extinguished.

She perceiving that his flame did slake,
And lov'd her only for his trophy's sake. Brown

To SLAM. v. a. [sema, Islandick, schlagen Dutch.] To slaughter; to crush. A word not used but in low conversation.

To SLANDER. v. a. [eschlaundre, Fr scandalum, Lat.] To censure falsely to belie.

Slender Valentine
With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent. Shakespeare

He hath slandered thy servant unto the king. Samuel

Give me leave to speak as earnestly in truly commending it, as you have done in natruly and unkindly detesting and slandering it. Whigg

Of all her dears she never slander'd one,
But eases not if a thousand are undone. Pope

SLANDER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. False invective.

When slanders do not live in tongues;
When cut-purses come not to throngs. Shakespeare

Since that, we hear he is in arms,
We think not so;
Yet charge the consul with our haries
That let him go;
So in our censure of the state
We fall do wander,
And make the careful magistrate
The mark of slander. Ben Jonson

We are not to be deceived by the slanders of columns of bad men, because our integrity shall then be cleared by him who cannot err in judi-ment. Ney

2. Disgrace; reproach.

Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins. Shakespeare

3. Disreputation; ill name.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most stepmothers,
Ill-eyed unto you. Shakespeare

SLANDERER. n. f. [from slander.] One who belies another; one who lays false imputations on another.

For our servants suffer any offence against you;
rather than against God: endure not that they do.

In rebuttal or answer, rebuttal, or answer of dis- putation.
Thou shalt answer for this, thou slanderer!
Dryden.

SLANDEROUS. adj. [from slander.]
1. Uttering reproachful falsehoods.

What king so strong
Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue? Shak.
To me belongs

The care to shun the blast of slanderous tongues;
Let malice, prone the virtuous to defame,
Thus with wild censure taint my spotless name.

2. Containing reproachful falsehoods; calumnious.

I was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detractors with the certain knowledge of their sland'rous intrusions. Spenser.

We lay their honours on this man,
To eat ourselves of cheeks slanderous loads. Shakspeare.

As by flattery a man opens his bosom to his mortal enemy, so by detraction and a slanderous misre-port he thus the same to his best friends. South.

SLAND'ROUSLY. adv. [from sland'rous.]
Calumniously; with false reproach.

I may the better satisfy them who object these defects, and slanderously bark at the courtesies which are held against that traitorous earl and his adhe-rants. Spenser.

They did slanderously object,
How that they durst not hazard to present
In person their defences. Daniel.

SLANTING. } serpent, Dutch. Shin-
} ser. Oblique; not direct; not perpen} dicular.

Late the clouds
Jesting, or push'd with winds, rude in their flock, Saw the slant lightning; whose thwart flame driv'n down

Kisses the gummy bark of fir and pine. Milton.
The sun round the globe describes the equator line,
By which wise means he can the whole survey

With a direct or with a slanting ray,
In the succession of a night and day. Blackmore.

SLANTLY. } adv. [from slant.] Ob-SLANTWISE. } liquely; not perpendicu} larly; slope.

Some maketh a hollownest half a foot deep,
With fewer sets in it, let slantwise asleep. Tupper.

SLAP. n. f. [schlap, German.] A blow.
Properly with the hand open, or with something rather broad than sharp.

The laugh, the slap, the jocund curse go round.
Thou son.

SLAP. adv. [from the noun.] With a sudden and violent blow.

Peg's servants complained; and if they offered to come into the warehouse, then straight went the yard slap over their noddle. Arbutnot.

TO SLAP. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with a slap.

Dick, who thus long had passive sat,
Here brook'd his chin, and cock'd his hat;
Then slapp'd his hand upon the board,
And thus the youth put in his word. Prior.

SLAPPAH. interj. [from slap and dah.]
All at once; as any thing broad falls with a slap into the water, and dashes it about. A low word.

And yet, slapp'd, is all again
In a twinkling, nerve, and vein. Prior.

TO SLASH. v. a. [slasu, to strike, Island-ic.]

The vig'rous steeds that drew his lord's calash,
To Peggy's side inclin'd. King.

TO SLASH. v. n. To strike at random with a sword; to lay about him.

The knights, with their bright burning blades,
Broke their rude troops, and orders did confound, Hewing and slashing at their idle shades. F. Queen.

Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book,
Like slashing Bentley with his despatch hook. Pope.

SLASH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Cut; wound.
Some few received some cuts and slashes that had drawn blood. Clarendon.

2. A cut in cloth.
What! this a screeve?

Here snip and nip, and cut, and slash and slash,
Like to a centurion in a barber's shop. Shakspeare.

Distinguish'd slashes deck the great,
As each excels in birth or state;
His oyle-holes are more and ampler;
The king's own body was a sampler. Prior.

SLATCH. n. f. [a sea term.] The middle part of a rope or cable that hangs down loose. Bailey.

SLATE. n. f. [from slit: slate is in some counties a crack; or from esclate, a tile, French.] A gray stone, easily broken into thin plates, which are used to cover houses, or to write upon.

A square cannot be so truly drawn upon a slate
as it is conceived in the mind. Greiv.

A small piece of a flat slate the ants laid over the hole of their nest, when they foresaw it would rain. Spectator.

TO SLATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover the roof; to tile.

Sonnets and elegies to Chloris,
Would raise a house about two stories,
A lyric ode would slate. Swift.

with slates or tiles.

SLATTER. n. f. [slactti, Swedish.] A woman negligent, not elegant or nice.

Without the raising of which tum,
You dare not be so troublesome
To pinch the slatters black and blue,

For leaving you their work to do. Hudibras.

We may always observe, that a gossip in poli-ticks is a slattern in her family. Addison.

The fallow skin is for the swarthy put,
And love can make a slattern of a slut. Dryden.

Beneath the lamp her tawdry ribbands glaze,
The new-fur'd d manseau, and the slattern air. Gay.

SLATY. adj. [from slate.] Having the nature of slate.

All the stone that is slaty, with a texture long,
and parallel to the site of the stratum, will split only lengthways, or horizontally; and, if placed in any other position, 'tis apt to give way, flake, and burst, when any considerable weight is laid upon it. Woodward.

SLAVE. n. f. [esclave, French.] It is said to have its original from the Slavi, or Scythians, subdued and sold by the Venetians.

1. One mancipiated to a master; not a freeman; a dependant.

The banish'd Kent, who in disguise
Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service
Improper for a slave. Shakspeare.

Thou elvish mark, abortive, rooting hog!
Thou that wast seal'd in thy nativity
The slave of nature, and the son of hell. Shakspeare.

Of guests he makes them slaves
Inhospitably. Milton.

The condition of servants was different from what it is now, they being generally slaves, and such as were bought and sold for money. South.

Perspective a painter must not want, yet without subduing ourselves to wholly to it, as to be compulsed of it. Dryden.

To-morrow, should we thus express our friendship,
Each might receive a slave into his arms:

This sun perhaps, this morning sun's the last
That e'er shall rise on Roman liberty. Addison.

2. One that has lost the power of resistance.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then
It grows impossible to govern men. Waller.

When once men are immured in sensual things,
and are become slaves to their passions and lusts, then are they most disposed to doubt of the existence of God. B. Atkins.

3. It is used proverbially for the lowest state of life.

Power shall not exempt the kings of the earth, and the great men, neither shall meanness excuse
the poorest slave. Nelson.

TO SLAVE. v. n. [from the noun.] To drudge; to toil; to toil.

Had women been the makers of our laws,
The men should slave at cards from morn to night. Swift.

SLAVER. n. f. [salva, Latin; slava, Slavick.] Spittle running from the mouth; drivel.

Matholus hath a passage, that a toad communi-cates its venom not only by urine, but by the humidity and slaver of its mouth, which will not consist with truth. Brown.

Of all mad creatures, if the learn'd are right,
It is the slaver kills, and not the bite. Pope.

TO SLAVER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be smeared with spittle.

Should I
Slaver with lips as common as the flairs

That mount the capitol, you grapes with hands
Made hard with hourly falsehood as with labour. Shakspeare.

slaver.] One who cannot hold his spittle; a driveller; an idiot.

SLAVERY. n. f. [from slave.] Servitude;
the condition of a slave; the offices of a slave.

If any dissentings were out of error, weakness, or obstinacy, yet no man can think it other than the badge of slavery, by whose violence and importu-nate obtrusions of violence to have the mist of his error dispell'd. King Charles.

SLAUGHTER. n. f. [imprauge, Saxon, from slagan, to strike or kill.]

Musacre; destruction by the sword.

Small Macdoff,
They were all struck for thee!

Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
Fell slaughter on their souls. Shakspeare.

On each hand slaughter and gignatuck deeds. Milton.

The pair you see,
Now friends below, in close embraces join;

But, when they leave the shady realms of night,
With mortal hate each other shall pursue:
What wars, what wounds, what slaughter shall ensue! Dryden.

TO SLAUGHTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

The unclely favour of a slaughterhouse!

For I am staked with the smell of sin. Shakspeare.

SLAUGHTERMAN. n. f. [slaughter and man.] One employed in killing.

The mad mothers with their howls confus'd
To break the clouds; as did the wives of Jewry,
At Herod's bloody hunting slaughtermen. Shakspeare.
Ten chas'd by one.

Are now each one the slaughterman of twenty. Shakspeare.

See, thou fight'st against thy countrymen;
And joint with them will be thy slaughtermen. Shakspeare.

SLAUGHTEROUS. adj. [from slaughter.] Destructive; murderous.

I have sapt full with horrors;
Dreadful familiar to my slaughterous thoughts Cannot once start me. Shakspeare.

SLAVISH. adj. [from slave.] Servile; mean; base; dependant.

A thing
More slavish did I ne'er, than answering
A slave without a knock. Shakspeare.

You have among you many a purchas'd slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs and mules,
You use in subject and in slavish part,
Pecunie you bought them. Shakspeare.

The supreme God, to whom all things ill
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance;
Would I could glut my gun, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd. Milton.

Those are the labour'd brows of slavish brains;
Not the effect of poetry, but pains. Denham.

Slavish bards, our mutual loves rehearse
The crying strains and ignominious voice. Prior.

SLAVISHLY. adv. [from slavish.] Servilely; meanly.

SLAVISHNESS. n. f. [from slavish.] Servility; meanness.

To SLAY. v. a. preterit, slaw; part. pass. slain. [slahan, Gothic; slaan, Saxon; slachten, Dutch, to strike.] To kill; to butcher; to put to death.

Her father's brother
Would be her lord; or shall I say her uncle?
Or he that slew her brothers and her uncle? Shakspeare.

Tyrant, flew thy face;
If thou be't slain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still. Shakspeare.

I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God. Revelations.

Slay and make ready.
Which killed the foolish man, and envy slameth the holy one. J. b.

Of Trojan chiefs he view'd a numerous train;
All march'd a-vented, all in battle slam. Dryden.

By blood and battles pow'r maintain,
And slay the monarchs, ere he rule the plain. Prior.

SLAYER. n. f. [from slay.] Killer; murderer; destroyer.

Waters the guiltless blood pour'd off on ground;
The crowned often slam, the slayer crown'd. Parry Queen.

They slaw those that were slayers of their countrymen. Abbot.

The slayer of him! If yet saw I there;
The gore conceal'd was clotted in his hair;
Whose half clos'd and gaping mouth he lay,
And grim as when he breath'd his full soul away. Dryden.

SLEAVE. n. f. [Of this word I know not well the meaning; slave silk is explained by Gouldman, flocus sericus, a lock of silk; and the women still say, slave the silk, for untwist it. Ainsworth calls a weaver's shuttle or reed a slay. To slay is to part a twist into single fibres.]

I on a fountain light,
Whole brain with pinks was plaited,
The banks with daisies dight
With grass like slaves was matted. Dryden.

SLEAVE. adj. [often written slave.] Weak; wanting substance. This seems to be of the same race with slave, or from to slay.

SLED. n. f. [slæd, Danish; slidde, Dutch.] A carriage drawn without wheels.

The slæd, the tumbrel, hurtle, and the sled. Dryden.

These all must be prepar'd. Dryden.

SLEDDED. adj. [from slæd.] Mounted on a sled.

So trown'd he once when in an angry pail,
He smote the *sled*ded Polack on the ice. Shakspeare.

SLEDGE. n. f. [pleeg, Saxon; sluggia, Islandick.]

1. A large heavy hammer.

They him spying, both with greedy force,
At once upon him ran, and him belet,
With strokes of mortal steel, without remorse,
And on his shield like iron sledges let. F. Queen.

The painful smith, with force of fervent heat,
The hardest iron soon doth mollify.
That with his heavy sledge he can it beat,
And fashion to what he it apply. Spenser.

The upland sledge is used by under-workmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter and draw it out; they use it with both their hands before them, and seldom hit their hammer higher than their head. Mason.

It would follow that the quick stroke of a light hammer should be of greater efficacy than any softer and more gentle striking of a great sledge. Watkins.

2. A carriage without wheels, or with very low wheels; properly a slæd. See SLED.

In slæd they use a sort of sledge made with thick wheels, to bring their mail out, drawn with one horse. Mortimer.

SLEEK. adj. [slæch, Dutch.]

1. Smooth; nitid; glossy.

Let me have men about me that are fat,
Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep a-nights. Shakspeare.

How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,
As if it fed ye; and how sleek and wanton
Y' appear in ev'ry thing may bring my ruin. Shak.

What time the groves were clad in green,
The fields all dress'd in flowers,
And that the sleek-haired nymphs were seen
To seek their summer bowers. Dryden.

As in gaze admiring, oft he bow'd
His turret crest, and sleek cannell'd neck, Fawning. Milton.

Thy head and hair are sleek,
And then thou kemb'st the tuzes on thy cheek. Dryden.

So sleek her skin, so faultless was her make,
Ev'n Juno did unwilling pleasure take
To see so fair a rival. Dryden.

2. Not rough; not harsh.

Those rugged names to our little mouths grow slæch,
That would have made Quinlan stare and gasp. Milton.

To SLEEK. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To comb smooth and even.

Yet are the men more loose than they,
More kemb'd, and bath'd, and rubb'd, and trimm'd,
More sleek'd, more tott, and slacker limb'd. Ben Jonson.

By dead Parthenope's dear tomb,
And fair Ligea's golden comb,
Wherewith the fits on diamond rocks
Sticking her tott alarming locks. Milton.

2. To render soft, smooth, or glossy.

Coats my lord, sleek o'er your rugged locks;
Be bright and jovial among your guests to-night. Shakspeare.

She does sleek
With crumbs of bread and milk, and lies a-nights
In her neat gloves. Ben Jonson.

The persuasive rhetoric
That sleek'd his tongue, and won to much on Eve,
So little here, nay lost. Milton.

A fleet of well sleek'd warlike paper did not cut any of its distinct colours upon the wall. Bayle.

A crate of fragrance form'd of burnish'd gold,
Odour divine! whose soft refreshing dreams
Sleek the smooth skin, and set the mossy lips. Pope.

SLEEKLY. adv. [from sleek.] Smoothly; glossy.

Let their heads be sleek'd, comb'd, and their coats brush'd. Shakspeare.

SLEEKSTONE. n. f. [slæck and stone.] A smoothing stone.

The parent *sleek*board with a *sleek*stone and as even as you can. Pope.

To SLEEP. v. n. [slæpan, Gothic; slæpan, Saxon; slapen, Dutch.]

1. To take rest, by suspension of the mental and corporal powers.

I've watch'd and travel'd hard
Some time I shall sleep out; the rest I'll whistle. Shakspeare.

Where's Pede?—go you, and where you mind. Shakspeare.

That, ere the sleep, hath thrice her prayers said,
Kein up the organs of her fantasy.
Sleep she as found as carolets mincey.

But those that sleep, and think not on their fate,
Punch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, loins, flims. Shakspeare.

If the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep wait pledge. Deuteronomy.

Peace, good reader! do not weep,
Peace! the lovers are asleep;
They, sweet turtles! folded he
In the last knot that love could tie.

I of them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this morn'g night be gone,
And th' eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn,

And they waken with that light
Whole day shall never sleep in night. Crab.

Those who at any time sleep without dream, can never be convinced that their thoughts are four hours busy without their knowing it. Locke.

2. To rest; to be motionless.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out butley-boned clown in chimes of beef ere I in thy death, I beseech Jove on my knees may it be turn'd into hobnails. Shakspeare.

How sweet the moonlight slæps upon this face
Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears. Shakspeare.

The paddy ship, betwixt the winds and the sea,
For'd back and forwards, in a circle rides, Stunn'd with the different blows, then flows and Till counterblast'd the stops, and slæps again. Pope.

3. To live thoughtlessly.

We sleep over our happiness, and want not rout'd into a quick thankful sense of it. Locke.

4. To be dead; death being a slæp in which man will some time awake.

If we believe that Jesus died, and rose even to them also which sleep in Jesus, who bring with him. 1 Cor.

A person is said to be dead to the world, cannot raise from the grave; though he owes unto God, who can raise from the dead.

5. To be inattentive; not vigilant.

Heav'n will one day open
The king's eyes, that so long have slæp'd upon
This blind, bad man. Shakspeare.

6. To be unnoticed, or unattended.

You ever
Have wish'd the sleeping of this business over,
Deh'd it to be furr'd.

SLEEP. n. f. [from the verb.] Repose; suspension of the mental and corporal powers; slumber.

Methought I heard a voice cry, sleep no more,
Macbeth doth murder sleep; the innocent
Sleep, that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care,
The birth of each day's life, fore labour's bath,
Helm of hunt minds, great nature's second Chief nourisher in life's feast. Shakspeare.

That sleep night twice to be
His rentail eyes, he enter'd, and in his bed
In silence took. Shakspeare.

Could call the spirits to succour, and the they cannot so well close and go to rest head, which is ever requisite to slæp. And that came, plain and noble, sleep and sleepers furthereth sleep.

Bacon.
 Reas't that sleep in winter, as wild bears, during their sleep was very fat, though they eat nothing.
Bacon.

His fallen'd hands the sluggish sleep
 And, fix'd on heav'n, his eyes repel invading sleep.
Dryden.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd;
 His hat adorn'd with wings disclose'd the god,
 And in his hand the sleep compelling rod. Dryden.
 Infants spend the greatest part of their time in sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat, or some pain forces the mind to perceive it. Locke.

SLEEPER. n. f. [from sleep.]

1. One who sleeps; one who is not awake.
 Sound, music; come, my queen, take hand with me,
 And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be.
Shakespeare.

What's the business,
 That such an hideous trumpet calls to parley
 The sleepers of the house? Shakespeare.
 In some countries, a plant which shutteth in the night, openeth in the morning, and openeth wide at noon, the inhabitants say is a plant that sleepeth.
 There be sleepers now then; for almost all flowers
 do the like. Bacon.

Night is indeed the province of his reign;
 Yet all his dark exploits no more contain
 Than a spy taken, and a sleepers slain. Dryden.
 2. A lazy inactive drone.

He must be no great eater, drinker, nor sleepers, that will discipline his senses, and exert his mind;
 every worthy undertaking requires both. Cicero.

3. That which lies dormant, or without effect.

Let penal laws, if they have been sleepers of long, or if grown unfit for the present time, be by our judges confined in the execution. Bacon.

4. [from sleep.] A fish. Ainsworth.

SLEEPILY, adv. [from sleep.]

1. Drowsily; with desire to sleep.

2. Dull; lazily.

I rather chide to endure the wounds of those darts, which envy casteth at novelty, than to go on lazily and sleepily in the easy ways of ancient mis-takings. Raleigh.

3. Stupidly.

He could make us believe that Luther in these actions pretended to authority, forgetting what he had sleepily owned before. Atterbury.

SLEEPINESS, n. f. [from sleepy.] Drow-ziness; disposition to sleep; inability to keep awake.

Watchfulness precedes too great sleepiness, and is the most illoding symptom of a fever. Arbuthnot.

SLEEPLESS, adj. [from sleep.] Wanting sleep; always awake.

The field
 To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd,
 Though after sleepless night. Milton.

While penive poets painful vigils keep,
Sleepless themselves to give their readers sleep. Pope.

SLEEPY, adj. [from sleep.]

1. Drowsy; disposed to sleep.

2. Not awake.

Why did you bring these daggers from the place?
 They must be there—Go, carry them, and swear
 The sleepy grooms with blood. Shakespeare.

She wak'd her sleepy crew,
 And, rising hasty, took a short adieu. Dryden.

3. Soporiferous; soporiferous; causing sleep.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses wantelligent of our insouciance, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us. Shakespeare.

Let such bewitch them, if the sleepy dream
 Of that forgetful lake benumb not still. Milton.

I slept about eight hours, and no wonder; for the physician had mingled a sleepy potion in the wine. Gulliver.

SLEET, n. f. [perhaps from the Danish slet.] A kind of smooth final hail or
 VOL. II.

snow, not falling in flakes, but single particles.

Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
 The midmost battles hast'ning up behind.

Who view, far off, the storm of falling sleet,
 And hear their thunder rattling in the wind. Dryden.

Perpetual sleet and driving snow
 Obscure the skies, and hang on herds below.

Huge oxen stand inclos'd in wintry walls
 Of snow congel'd. Dryden.

Rains would have been poured down, as the vapours became cooler; next sleet, then snow, and ice. Chrysostom.

TO SLEET, v. n. [from the noun.] To snow in small particles, intermixed with rain.

SLEET, adj. [from the noun.] Bringing sleet.

SLEEVE, n. f. [rhp, Saxon.]

1. The part of the garment that covers the arms.

Once my well-waiting eyes espied my treasure,
 With sleeves turn'd up, loose hair, and breast enlarged,

Her father's corn, moving her fair limbs, measure.

The deep smock sleeve, which the Irish women use, they say, was old Spanish, and yet that should seem rather to be an old English fashion: for in armor, the fashion of the manchet, which is given in arms, being nothing else but a sleeve, is fashioned much like to that sleeve. And knights, in ancient times, used to wear their mistress's or love's sleeve upon their arms; for Launcelot wore the sleeve of the fair maid of Asteloth in a tourney. Spenser.

Your hose should be ungartered, your sleeve unbuttoned, your shoe untied, demonstrating a careless desolation. Shakespeare.

You would think a smock a she-angel, he so chants to the sleeve band, and the work about the square on't. Shakespeare.

He was clothed in cloth, with wide sleeves and a cape. Bacon.

In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
 Their hoods and sleeves the same. Dryden.

2. SLEEVE, in some provinces, signifies a knot or kein of silk, which is by some very probably supposed to be its meaning in the following passage. [See SLAVE.]

The innocent sleeve;
 Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care. Shaksp.

3. Sleeve, Dutch, signifies a cover; any thing spread over: which seems to be the sense of sleeve in the proverbial phrase.

A brace of sharpers laugh at the whole roguery in their sleeves. L'Estrange.

Men know themselves utterly void of those qualities which the impudent lycophant ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing.
South.

John laughed heartily in his sleeve at the pride of the esquire. Arbuthnot.

4. To hang on a sleeve; to make dependent.

It is not for a man which doth know, or should know, what orders, and what peaceable government requireth, to ask why we should hang our judgment upon the church's sleeve, and why in matters of orders more than in matters of doctrine. Hooker.

5. [from sleep.] A fish. Ainsworth.

SLEEVED, adj. [from sleeve.] Having sleeves.

SLEEVELESS, adj. [from sleeve.]

1. Wanting sleeves; having no sleeves.

His clothes were strange tho' coarse, and black tho' bare;
Sleeveless his jerkin was, and it had been Velvet; but 'twas now, so much ground was seen, Became tufflusty. Domin.

They put on sleeveless coats of home-spun cotton.
Sindys.

Behold you idle by palmers, pilgrims, trod, Grave numerals! Sleeveless some, and shirk to others. Pope.

2. Wanting reasonableness; wanting propriety; wanting solidity. [This sense, of which the word has been long misapplied, I know not well how it obtained.

Shakespeare thinks it properly sleepless or lifeless; to this I cannot heartily agree, though I know not what better to suggest. Can it come from sleep, a sleep or sleep, and so signify unconnected, hanging ill together or from sleeve, a cover, and therefore means plainly absurd, foolish without palliation.]

This sleeveless tale of transubstantiation was brought into the world by that other fable of the multiplicity. Hall.

My landlady quarrelled with him for sending every one of her children on a sleeveless errand, as she calls it. Speckator.

SLEIGHT, n. f. [from slight, cunning; Islandick.]
 Artful trick; cunning artifice; dexterous practice; as, slight of hand, the tricks of a juggler. This is often written, but less properly, flight.

He that exhorted to beware of an enemy's policy, doth not give counsel to be impolitic; but rather to be all prudent foresight, lest our simplicity be over-reached by cunning slights. Hooker.

Fair Una to the red cross knight
 Betrothed is with joy;
 Though false Duessa, it to bar,
 Her false slights do employ. Fairy Queen.

Upon the corner of the mountain
 There hangs a vaporous drop profound;
 I'll catch it ere it come to ground;
 And that distill'd by magic slights,
 Shall rate such artificial slights.
 As, by the strength of their illusion,
 Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakespeare.

Out step the ample size
 Of mighty Ajax, huge in strength; to him, Laertes' son,
 That crafty one as huge in slight. Chapman.

She could not to convey
 The massy substance of that idol great;
 What slight had the the wardens to betray?
 What strength to heave the goddess from her seat? Palfrey.

In the wily snake
 Whate'er slights, none would suspicious mask,
 As from his wit and native subtilty Proceeding. Milton.

Double is the pleasure as great
 Of being cheated, as to cheat;
 As lockers on feel most delight,
 That least perceive the juggler's slight. Hudibras.

Good humour is but a slight of hand, or a faculty making truths look like appearances, or appearances like truths. L'Estrange.

When we hear death is rated, we are all willing to favour the slight, when the poet does not too greatly impute upon us. Dryden.

While innocent he seems ignoble flight,
 His honest friends preserve him by a slight. Swift.

SLENDER, adj. [from slender, Dutch.]

1. Thin; small in circumference compared with the length; not thick.

So thick the roses bustling round
 About her glow'd; half slooping to support
 Each flow'r of slender stalk. Milton.

2. Small in the waist; having a fine shape.

What slender youth, bedew'd with liquid odours,
 Courts thee on roses in some pleasant cave? Milton.

Beauteous Helen shines among the rest,
 Tall, slender, straight, with all the graces blest. Dryden.

3. Not bulky; slight; not strong.

Love in these labyrinths his slaves detains,
 And mighty hearts are held in slender chains. Pope.

4. Small; inconsiderable; weak.

Yet they, who claim the general assent of the whole world unto that which they teach, and do not fear to give very hard and heavy sentences upon many as refuse to embrace the same, must have 41

Special regard, that their first foundations and grounds be more than slender probabilities. Hayter.
Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;
Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident. Shaksp.
Positively to define that season, there is no slender difficulty. Brown.

It is a very slender comfort that relies upon this nice distinction, between things being troublesome, and being evils; when all the evil of affliction lies in the trouble it creates to us. Tillotson.

5. Sparing; less than enough: as, a slender estate, and slender parts.

At my lodging,
The worst is this, that, at a slender warning,
You're like to have a thin and slender pittance. Shakspere.

6. Not amply supplied.

The good Ottomus often deign'd
To grace my slender table with his presence. Philips.
In obnoxious saturnal story, the alchemist ought to be cool, slender, thin, debating. Arbutnot.

SLENDERLY, adv. [from slender.]

1. Without bulk.

2. Slightly; meanly.

If the debt be not just, we know not what may be deemed just, neither is it a sum to be slenderly regarded. Hayward.

If I have done well, it is that which I desired; but if slenderly and meanly, it is that which I could attain to. 2 Maccabees.

SLENDERNESS, n. f. [from slender.]

1. Thinness; smallness of circumference.
Small whistles give a found because of their extreme slenderness, the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Bacon.

Their colours arise from the thinness of the transparent parts of the feathers; that is, from the slenderness of the very fine hairs or capillaments, which grow out of the sides of the groffer lateral branches or fibres of those feathers. Newton.

2. Want of bulk or strength.

It is preceded by a splitting of blood, or caused by its acrimony, and too great a projectile motion, with slenderness and weakness of the vessels. Arbutnot.

3. Slightness; weakness; inconsiderable ness.

The slenderness of your reasons against the book, together with the inconveniences that must of necessity follow, have procured a great credit unto it. Whiteft.

4. Want of plenty.

SLIGHT. The preterit of slay.

Silence; coeval with eternity;
Thou wert ere nature first began to be,
I was ere e'en nothing all, and all slight fast in thee. Pope.

SLEW. The preterit of slay.

He slaw Haueet, a great commander among the Numidians, and chiefed Benchades and Amida, two of their greatest princes, out of the country. Knolls.

To SLEW, v. n. [See SLEAVE.] To part or twist into threads.

Why art thou then exasperate, thou immaterial stream of slay'd silk? Shakspere.

To SLICE, v. n. [Hebrew, Saxon.]

1. To cut into flat pieces.

Their cooks make no more ado, but, licing it into little gol-bits, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a turn-ice. Sandys.

The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pikes and licing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.

2. To cut into parts.

Nature lost one by thee, and therefore must slace one in two to keep her number just. Chaucer.

3. To cut off in a broad piece.

When hungry thou dost slace like an oaf,
I slid the luscious from the barley loaf. Gay.

4. To cut; to divide.

Princes and tyrants slace the earth among them. Burnet.

SLICE, n. f. [Hebrew, Sax. from the verb.]

1. A broad piece cut off.

Hacking of trees in their bark, both downright and scrufs, so as you may make them rather in slace than in continued backs, doth greet good to trees.

You need not wipe your knife to cut bread; because in cutting a slice or two it will wipe itself. Swift.

He from out the chimney took
A slice of bacon off the hook.

And freely, from the fattest side,
Cut out large slices to be fried. Swift.

2. A broad piece.

Then clap four pieces of plaster on't;
That, lac'd with bits of rustick, makes a front. Pope.

3. A broad head fixed in a handle; a peel; a spatula.

The pelican hath a beak broad and flat, much like the face of apothecaries, with which they spread plasters. Hakewill.

When burning with the iron in it, with the slace clap the coals upon the outside close together, to keep the heat in. Moxon.

SLICK, adj. [slucht, Dutch. See SLEEK.]

Whom silver bow'd Appollo bred, in the Pierian mead,

Both slack and daintie, yet were both in warre of wondrous dread. Chapman.

Glass attracts but weakly, some slack stones, and thick glasses, indifferently. Brown.

SLID. The preterit of slide.

At first the silent venom slid with ease,
And seiz'd her cooler senses by degrees. Dryden.

From the tops of heav'n's steep hill the slid,
And straight the Greeks swift ships the reach. Chapman.

SLIDDER. The participle passive of slide.

Why is this people slidden back, by a perpetual backsliding? Jeremiah.

To SLIDDER, v. n. [slidderen, Dutch.]

To slide with interruption.

Go thou from me to fate,
Now die: with that he dragg'd the trembling fire,
Slid rang through clott'd blood. Dryden.

The tempter saw the danger in a trice;
For the man slidder'd upon fortune's vice. Harte.

To SLIDE, v. n. preterit, slid; participle pass. slidden. [Hebrew, slidenbe, sliding; Saxon; sliden, Dutch; glithe, Welsh.]

1. To pass along smoothly; to slip; to glide.

Sounds do not only slide upon the surface of a smooth body, but communicate with the parts in the pores. Fucon.

Ulysses, Sthenelus, Teucer slide
Down by a rope, Machaon was their guide. Deane.

2. To move without change of the foot.

Oh, I adon, happy I adon! rather slide them run by her, lest thou shouldst make her legs slip from her. Shakspere.

Smooth sliding without sleep.
He that once has, like him that slides on ice,
Goes swiftly down the slippery ways of vice;
Though conference checks him, yet, those rubs gone o'er,
He slides on smoothly, and looks back no more. Dryden.

3. To pass inadvertently.

Make a door and a bar for thy mouth; beware thou slide not by it. Ecclesiasticus.

4. To pass unnoticed.

In the prince's I could find no apprehension of what I said or did, but with a calm carelessness, letting every thing slide justly, as we do by their speeches, who neither in matter nor person do any way belong unto us. Sidney.

5. To pass along by silent and unobtruded progression.

Thou shalt
Hate all, shew charity to none;
But let the famish'd slid from the bone,
Ere thou relieve the beggar. Shakspere.

Then no day void of bliss, of pleasure, leaving,
Ages shall slide away without perceiving. Dryden.

Rescue me from their ignoble hands:
Let me kiss yours when you my wound begin,
Then easy death will slide with pleasure in. Dryden.

Their eye slides over the pages, or the words

 Their shooting gems, a swelling knot there grows:
 Just in that place a narrow slit we make,
 Then other buds from bearing trees we take;
 Interted thus, the wounded rind we close. Dryden.

I found, by looking through a slit or oblong hole, which was narrower than the pupil of my eye, and held close to it parallel to the prism, I could see the circles much distincter, and visible to a far greater number, than otherwise. Newton.

To SLIVE. } v. a. [slivan, Saxon.]
 To SLIVER. } To split; to divide longwise; to tear off longwise.

Laver of blaspheming Jew;
 Gall of goat; and slips of yew,
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shakespeare.

SLIVER. n. f. [from the verb.] A branch torn off. Sliver, in Scotland, still denotes a slice cut off: as, he took a large sliver of the beef.

There on the pendent boughs her coronet weed
 Clam'ring to hang, an envious slaver broke,
 When down her weedy coronet and herself
 Fell in the weeping brook. Shakespeare.

SLOATH. n. f. Of a cart, are those under-pieces which keep the bottom together. Bailey.

SLO'BBER. n. f. [glavoberio, Welsh.] Slaver.

 plum.

The fair pomegranate might adorn the pine,
 The grape the bramble, and the sloe the vine. Blackmore.

When you fell your underwoods, low haws and sloes in them, and they will furnish you, without doing of your woods any hurt. Montmor.

SLOOR. n. f. A final ship, commonly with only two masts.

To SLOP. v. a. [from lap, lop, slop.] To drink grossly and greedily.

SLOP. n. f. [from the verb.] Mean and vile liquor of any kind. Generally some nauseous or useless medicinal liquor.

The sick husband here wanted for neither slops
 nor doctors. L'Estrange.

But then, whatever slops she will have bought,
 Be thankful. Dryden.

SLOP. n. f. [slop, Saxon; slorre, Dutch,
 a covering.] Trowlers; open breeches What said Mr. Dumbledon about the Latin in my short cloak and slops. Shakespeare.

SLOPE. adj. [This word is not derived from any satisfactory original. Junius omits it: Skinner derives it from slap, fax, Dutch; and derives it from the curve of a loose rope. Perhaps its original may be latent in loopen, Dutch, to run, slope being easy to the runner.] Oblique; not perpendicular. It is generally used of acclivity or declivity, forming an angle greater or less with the plane of the horizon.

Where there is a greater quantity of water, and space enough, the water moveth with a slope rate and fall. Bacon.

Murm'ring waters fall
 Down the slope hills, dispers'd, or in a lake,
 That to the fringed bank with myrtle crown'd
 Her apical mirror holds, unite their streams. Milton.

SLOPE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. An oblique direction; any thing obliquely directed.

2. Declivity; ground cut or formed with declivity.

Growing upon slopes is caused for that moeth, as it cometh of nature, so the water must but slide, not be in a pool. Bacon.

My lord advances with majestic mien,
 And when up t'ron steep slopes you've dragg'd your thighs,

Just at his study door he'll bless your eyes. Pope.

SLOPE. adv. Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

Uriel
 Return'd on that bright beam, whose point now turn'd

Bore him slope downward to the sun, now fall'st. Milton.

To SLOPE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
 To form to obliquity or declivity; to direct obliquely.

Though blinded corn be lodg'd, and trees blown
 down,

Though palaces and pyramids do slope
 Their heads to their foundations. Shakespeare.
 On each hand the flames

Driv'n backward, slope their pointed spires, and roll'd

In billows, leave it th' midst a horrid vale. Milton.

The star, that rose at evening bright, Toward heav'n's deokent had slop'd his westerling wheel. Milton.

All night I slept, oblivious of my pain;
 Aurora dawn'd, and Phoebus shinn'd in vain;
 Nor, till oblique he slop'd his evening ray,
 Had Somnus dried the balmy dews away. Pope.

To SLOPE. v. n. To take an oblique or declivous direction.

Between the midst and theft, the gods assign'd
 Two habitable seats for human kind;
 And cross their limits cut a sloping way,
 Which the twelve signs in beauteous order sway. Dryden.

There is a handsome work of piles made sloping athwart the river, to stop the trees which are cut down, and cast into the river. Brown.

Up it is a palace, lo! th' obedient base
Slopes it is foot, the woods its sides embrace. Pope.

There is a flight hole in every ant's nest half an inch deep, and then it goes down sloping into a place where they have their magazine. Spectator.

On the south aspect of a sloping hill,
 Whose skirts meand'ring Peneus wadies still,
 One pious laborer pat's his youthful days
 In peace and charity, in pray'r and praise. Harte.

SLOPINESS. n. f. [from slope.] Obliquity;
 declivity; not perpendicularity.

The Italians give the cover a graceful pendence of slopes, dividing the whole breadth into nine parts, whereof two shall leave for the elevation of the highest ridge. Wotton.

SLOPEWISE. adj. [slope and wise.] Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

The Wear is a fish, reaching slopewise through the Gt. from the land to low-water mark, and having in a bent or cod with an eye-hook; where the fish entering, upon their coming back with the ebb, are flopped from slipping out again, forsaken by the water, and left dry on the oie. Carew.

SLOPINGLY. adv. [from sloping.] Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

SLOT. n. f. [slod, Islandick.] The track of a deer.

SLOTH. n. f. [slapð, slapð, Saxon.]
 It might therefore be not improperly written slouth, but that it seems better to regard the orthography of the presentive slow.

1. Slowness; tardiness.

These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory slowness and ticks of Rome. Shakespeare.

2. Laziness; sluggishness; idleness.

Paite of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand,
Hog in slowness, fox in stealth. Shakespeare.
They change their course to pleasure, ease, and slowness. Milton.

Industry approach'd,
And row'd him from his miserable slowness. Thomson.
3. An animal.

The slowness is an animal of so slow a motion, that he will be three or four days at least in climbing up and coming down a tree; and to go the length of fifty paces on plain ground, requires a whole day.
Greene.

SLOTHFUL. adj. [slowness and full.] Idle; lazy; sluggish; inactive; indolent; dull of motion.

He that is slowness in his work, is brother to him that is a great waiter. Proverbs.

The desire of the slowness killeth him; for his hands refuse to labour. Proverbs.

To vice industrious; but to nobler deeds
Laziness and slowness. Milton.

Flora commands those nymphs and knights,
Who lov'd in slowness ease and loiter delights,
Who never acts of honour durst pursue,
The men inglorious knights, the ladies all untrue.

The very soul of the slowness does effectually but lie drowning in his body, and the whole man is totally given up to his senses. L'Estrange.

Another is deaf to all the motives to piety,
by indulging an idle slowness temper. Law.

SLOTHFULLY. adv. [from slowness.] Idly;
lazily; with slowness.

SLOTHFULNESS. n. f. [from slowness.]
Idleness; laziness; sluggishness; inactivity.

To trust to labour without prayer, argueth impiety and prophaneity; it maketh light of the providence of God; and although it be not the intent of a religious mind, yet it is the fault of those men whose religion wanteth light of a mature judgment to direct it, when we join with our prayer slowness, and neglect of convenient labour. Hooker.
Slowness casteth into a deep sleep, and an idle soul shall suffer hunger. Proverbs.

SLOUCH. n. f. [slough; Danish, stupid.]

1. A downcast look; a depression of the head. In Scotland, an ungainly gait, as also the person whose gait it is.

Our doctor has every quality that can make a man useful; but, alas! he hath a sort of slouch in his walk. Swift.

2. A man who looks heavy and clownish.

Begin thy carols then, thou vanishing slouch,
Be thine the oaken staff, or mine the pouch. Gay.

TO SLOUCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To have a downcast clownish look.

SLOVEN. n. f. [slough; Dutch; sluyten, Welsh, nasty, thabby.] A man indecently negligent of cleanliness; a man dirty dressed.

The ministers came to church in handsome holiday apparel, and that himself did not think them bound by the law of God to go like slovens. Hooker.

Affect in things about thee cleanliness,
That all may gladly board thee as a host:

Slovens take up their flock of nonpareils Beforehand, and anticipate their last hour. Herbert.

You laugh, half beard, half slowness, at I stand;
My wig half powder, and all tussle my hand. Pope.

Their methods various, but alike their aim;
The slowness and the fopling are the same. Young.

SLOVENLINESS. n. f. [from slowness.] In-decient negligence of dress; neglect of cleanliness.

Slowness is the worst sign of a hard heart, and civility the best exercise of the reins; yet not to be exact in the phrase of compliment, or gestures of courtesy. Milton.

SLOVENLY. adj. [from slowness.] Negligent of dress; negligent of neatness; not neat; not cleanly.

Esop at last found out a slowness lazy fellow, tolling at his ease, as if he had nothing to do.

L'Estrange.

SLOVENLY. adv. [from slowness.] In a coarse inelegant manner.

As I hang my clothes on somewhat slowness, I no sooner went in but he frowned upon me. Pope.

SLOVENRY. n. f. [from slowness.] Dirti-ness; want of neatness.

Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field;
There's not a piece of feather in our host,
And time hath worn us into slowness. Shakespeare.

SLOUGH. n. f. [slough; Saxon.]

1. A deep miry place; a hole full of dirt.

The Scots were in a fallow field, whereto the English could not enter, but over a cross ditch and a slough; in passing whereto many of the English horses were plunged, and some mired. Hayward.

The way being foul, twenty to one
He's here stuck in a slough, and overthrown. Milt.

A carter had laid his waggon fast in a slough.
L'Estrange.

2. The skin which a serpent casts off at his periodical renovation.

Thy fates open their hands, let thy blood and spirit embrace them, and to mine thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough, and appear fresh. Shakespeare.

When the mind is quicken'd
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their dusty grave, and newly move,
With eadled slough, and fresh legency. Shakespeare.

Oh let not sleep my closing eyes invade
In open plains, or in the secret shade,
When he, renew'd in all the sprinkled pride
Of pompous youth, has cast his slough aside,
And in his summer liv'ly rolls along Ereft, and brandishing his forked tongue. Deuden.

The slough of an English viper, that is, the cuticula, they cast off twice every year, at spring and fall, the separation begins at the head, and is finished in twenty-four hours. Greene.

The body, which we leave behind in this visible world, is as the womb or slough from whence we issue, and are born into the other. Greene.

3. It is used by Shakespeare simply for the skin.

As the snake, roll'd in a flow'ry bank,
With shining checker'd slough, doth tinge a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Henry vi.

4. The part that separates from a foul fore.

At the next dressing I found a slough come away with the dressings which was the fester. Wise.

TO SLOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.] To part from the found flesh. A surgical term.

SLOUGHY. adj. [from slough.] Miry;
boggy; muddy.

That custom should not be allowed, of cutting feraws in low grounds sloughy underneath, which turn into bog. Swift.

SLOW. adj. [slap, pleap, Saxon; slow, Frisick.]

1. Not swift; not quick of motion; not speedy; not having velocity; wanting celerity.

Me thou think'st not slow,
Who since the morning hour set out from heav'n,
Where God resides, and on mid-day arriv'd
In Eden, distance inexpressible! Milton.

Where the motion is so slow as not to supply a constant train of fresh ideas to the senses, the sense of motion is lost. Locke.

2. Late; not happening in a short time.

These changes in the heav'n's, though slow, produce'd
Like change on sea and land, sidereal blast. Milton.

3. Not ready; not prompt; not quick.

I am slow of speech, and a slow tongue. Erosus.
Mine ear shall not be slow, mine eye not shut. Milton.

The slow of speech makes in dreams unexpressed taped harangues, or converse so readily in language that they are but little acquainted with. Addison.

For though in dreadful whirls we hang High on the broken wave,
I know thou wert not slow to hear,
Nor impotent to save. Addison.

4. Dull; inactive; tardish; sluggish.

Fix'd on defence, the Trojans are not slow
To guard their shore from an expected foe. Dryden.

5. Not hasty; acting with deliberation, not vehement.

The Lord is merciful, and slow to anger.

He that is slow to wrath, is of great understanding. Proverbs.

The politick and wife
Are fly slow things with circumspective eyes. Pope.

6. Dull; heavy in wit.

The blackhead is a slow worm.

SLOW. in composition, is an adverb slowly.

This slow-pac'd soul, which late did cleave
T' a body, and went but, by the body's leave,
Twenty perchance or thirty mile a day,
Dispatches in a minute all the way
Twixt heav'n and earth. Donne.

To the flame of slow endeavouring art
Thy early numbers slow. Milton.

This day's death denounc'd, if aught I see,
Will prove no sudden but a slow-pac'd evil,
A long day's dying to augment our pain. Milton.

For eight slow-circling years by tempests tost.

Some demon urg'd
T' explore the fraud with guile oppos'd to guile,
Slow-pacing three around th' insidious pile. Pope.

TO SLOW. v. a. [from the adjective.] To omit by dilatoriness; to delay; to procrastinate. Not in use. The true word was forflow.

Now do you know the reason of this haste?
---I would I knew not why it should be slow. Shakespeare.

SLOWLY. adv. [from slow.]

1. Not speedily; not with celerity; not with velocity.

The gnome rejoicing bears her gift away,
Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to day. Pope.

2. Not soon; not early; not in a little time.

The poor remnant of human feed peopled the country again slowly, by little and little. Pope.

Our fathers bent their painful industry
To check a monarchy that slowly grew,
But did not France or Holland's late friends.
Whole rising pow'rs to swift dominion led. Dryden.

We oft our slowly growing works import,
While images reflect from art to art. Pope.

3. Not hastily; not rashly; as, he determines slowly.

4. Not promptly; not readily; as, he learns slowly.

5. Tardily; sluggishly.

The chapel of St. Laurence advances so slowly, that 'tis not possible but the body of Medicus may be extinct before their burial place is finished. Addison.

SLOWNESS. n. f. [from slow.]

1. Smallness of motion; not speed, want of velocity; absence of celerity or swif-tiness.

Providence hath confined these human beings that what any invention hath in the strengthening motion, is abated in the slowness of it, and what it hath in the extraordinary quickness of it, must be must be allowed for in the great strength that is required unto it. Locke.

Motion is the absolute mode of a body, but swif-tiness or slowness are relative ideas. Locke.

2. Length of time in which any thing is or is brought to pass; not quickness.

Tyrants use what art they can to increase the length of death. Hooker.

Dulness to admit conviction or affection.
Christ would not heal their infirmities, because of the hardness and stoutness of their hearts, in that they believed him not. Bentley.

Want of promptness; want of readiness.
Deliberation; cool delay.

Dilatation; procrastination.

LOWWORM. n. f. [lappyn, Saxon.] The blind worm; a large viper, not mortal, fearedly venomous.

Though we have found formed snakes in the belly of the earth, or fluoribus, yet may the viper emphatically bear the name. Brown.

TO SLUMBER. v. a. [probably from lumb- ber.]

To do any thing lazily, imperfectly, or with idle hurry.

Nature showed the doth not like men who slum- ber up matters of mean account. Sidney.

Juliano told him, he would make some speed
On his return: he answer'd, do not so,
Slumber not belueth for my sake. Shakespeare.

As they are slumbered over, the malignity that in man will show itself in some chronic disease.
Weyman.

To slump; to daub. [This seems to be from slubber, slabber, or slaver.]

You must be content to slubber the glofs of your new fortunes with this more slubborn and boisterous expedition. Shakespeare.

To cover coarsely or carelessly. This is now not in use, otherwise than as a low colloquial word.

A man of secret ambitious ends, and proportionate counsels, smothered under the habit of a scholar, and slubbed over with a certain rude and clumsy fashion, that had the semblance of intellect. Wotton.

SLUMBERDREGGILLION. n. f. [I suppose a cant word without derivation.] A paltry, dirty, sorry wretch.

Quoth he, although thou hast deserv'd,
But slumberdreggillion, to be kill'd
Arthou shalt cow to deal with me,
Arthou hadst got the victory. Hudibras.

SLUDGE. n. f. [I suppose from slug, slough, Saxon.] Mire; dirt mixed with water.

The earth I made a mere soft sludge or mud.
Mortimer.

SLUG. n. f. [slug, Danish, and sluck, Dutch, heavily a glutton, and thence one that has the sloth of a glutton.]

An idler, a drone; a slow, heavy, sleepy, lazy wretch.

He! what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not!
Shakespeare.

A hinderance; an obstruction.

Many dulls and damps all improvements, Whom money would be fitting, if it were not for this slug. Bacon.

A kind of slow creeping snail.

[slug, a hammerhead, Sax.] A cylindrical or oval piece of metal shot from a gun.

When fractures are made with bullets or slugs,
the scapula and cranium are driven in together.
Weyman.

As, forc'd from wind-guns, lead itself can fly,
And poisonous slugs cut swiftly through the sky.
Pope.

TO SLUG. v. n. [from the noun.] To be idle; to play the drone; to move
slowly.

All he did was to deceive good knights,
And draw them from pursuit of praise and fame,
To slug in sloth and sensual delights,
And end their days with irremediable shame.
Fairy Queen.

He lay not all night slugging in a calms under his mantle, but used commonly to keep others waking to defend their lives. Spenser.

One went slugging on with a thousand cares.
L'Estrange.

SLUGGARD. n. f. [from slug.] An idler;
a drone; an inactive lazy fellow.

Cry mercy, lords, and watchful gentlemen,
That you have taken a tardy slug here.
Shakespeare.

This mightier found shall make
The dead to rise,
And open tombs and open eyes,
To the long *slug*gards of five thousand years.
Cowley.

Up, up, says Avarice; thou snor'st again,
Stretch best thy limbs, and yaw'n't, but all in vain:
The tyrant Lucius no denial takes;
At his command th' unwilling *slug*gard wakes.
Dryden.

Sprightly May commands our youth to keep The vigils of her night, and breaks their *slug*gard sleep. Dryden.

TO SLUGGARDIZE. v. a. [from *slug*gard.]
To make idle; to make drowsy.

Rather see the wonders of the world abroad,
Than, living dully *slug*gardiz'd at home,
Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness.
Shakespeare.

SLUGGISH. adj. [from slug.] Dull; drowsy; lazy; slothful; idle; insipid; slow; inactive; inert.

Sluggish idleness, the nurse of sin,
Upon a slothful ass he chose to ride. Fairy Queen.
The dull billows, thick as troubled mire,
Whom neither wind out of their feat could force,
Nor tides did drive out of their sluggish source.
Spenser.

One, bolder than the rest,
With his broad sword provok'd the sluggish beast.
Waller.

Matter, being impotent, sluggish, and inactive, hath no power to stir or move itself. Woodward.

SLUGGISHLY. adv. [from sluggish.]
Dully; not nimbly; lazily; idly;
slowly.

SLUGGISHNESS. n. f. [from sluggish.] Dulness; sloth; laziness; idleness; in-ertness.

The most of mankind are inclined by her slither,
if they would take the pains; no less than birds to fly, and hories to run, which if they lose, it is through their own sluggishness, and by that means become her prodigies, not her children.
Ben Jonson.

It is of great moment to teach the mind to shake off its sluggishness, and vigorously employ itself about what is reason shall direct. Locke.

SLUDGE. n. f. [slug, Dutch; elcluse, Fr.
elcluse, Italian.] A watergate; a flood-gate; a vent for water.

Two other precious drops, that ready flood Forth in their crystal sludge, be, ere they fell,
Kiss'd, as the gracious signs of sweet remorse,
And pious awe, that fear'd to have offended.
Milton.

Divine Alphons, who, by secret sludge,
Stole under seas to meet his Archduke. Milton.

It we receive them all, they were more than seven, it only the natural sludges, they were fewer.
Brown.

As waters from her sludges, flow'd Unbounded sorrow from her eyes. Prior.

Each sludge of affluent fortune open'd soon,
And wealth flow'd in at morning, night, and noon.
Harte.

TO SLUDGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To emit by floodgates.

Like a traitor coward, Stal'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood. Shakespeare.

Veins of liquid ore sludg'd from the lake.
Milton.

You wrong me, if you think I'll sell one drop.
Within these veins for pageants; but let honour

Call for my blood, I'll sludge it into streams;
Turn fortune loose again to my pursuit,
And let me hunt her through embattled foes.
In dusty plains; there will I be the first. Dryden.

SLUDGE. adv. [from sludge.] Falling in streams as from a sluice or floodgate.
And oft whole sheets descend of sluicy rain,
Suck'd by the spring clouds from off the main:
The lofty skies at once come pouring down,
The promis'd crop and golden labours drown.
Dryden.

TO SLUMBER. v. n. [slumman, Saxon; sluymeren, Dutch.]

1. To sleep lightly; to be not awake, nor in profound sleep.

He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep. Psalms.
Conscience wakes despair that slumber'd. Milton.

2. To sleep; to repose. Sleep and slumber are often confounded.

God speaketh yet man perceiveth it not: in a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed. Job.

Have ye chosen this place,
After the toil of battle, to repose
Your wearied virtue, for the use you find
To slumber here? Milton.

3. To be in a state of negligence and su-ppineness.

Why slumbers Pope, who leads the tuneful train,
Not hears that virtue which he loves complain?
Young.

TO SLUMBER. v. a.

1. To lay to sleep.

2. To stupify; to stun.

Then up he took the slumber'd senseless corse,
And, ere he could out of his swoon awake,
Him to his castle brought. Fairy Queen.
To honest a deed after it was done, or to slumber his conscience in the doing, he studied other means to save. Wotton.

SLUMBER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Light sleep; sleep not profound.
And for his dreams, I wonder he's to fond
To trust the mockery of unquiet slumbers.
Shakespeare.

From creak'd floors it shall fall into slumber, and from a slumber it shall tattle into a deep and long sleep, till at last, perhaps, it shall sleep itself into a change, and that such an one, that nothing but hell and judgment shall awaken it. South.

Labour and rest, that equal periods keep,
Obscure slumbers that can wake and weep. Pope.

2. Sleep; repose.

Boy! Lucius! full asleep! It is no matter;
Enjoy the heavy heavy dew of slumber. Shakespeare.
Ev'n lust and envy sleep, but love denies Rest to my soul, and slumbers to my eyes
Three days I promis'd to attend my doom,
And two long days and nights are yet to come.
Dryden.

SLUMBEROUS. } adj. [from slumber.]

SLUMBERY. }
1. Inviting to sleep; soporiferous; causing sleep.

The timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumberous weight, inclines
Our eyelids. Milton.

While pensive in the silent slumberous shade,
Sleep's gentle pow'rs her drooping eyes invade;
Minerva, like like, on embosom'd air
Imprint'd the form of Iphigenia. Pope.

There every eye with slumberous chains the-bound,
And dash'd the flowing goblets to the ground. Pope.

2. Sleepy; not waking.

A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching: in this slumbery agitation, what have you heard her say? Shakespeare.

SLUNG. The pret. and part. pass. of slung.

SLUNK. The pret. and part. pass. of slunk.

Silence accompany'd; for beast, and bird,
They to their grassy couch, these to their nests,
Were flunk. Milton.

To SLUR. v. a. [flourig, Dutch, nasty;
floore, a flut.]

1. To fully; to foil; to contaminate.
2. To pals lightly; to balk; to misf.

The atheists laugh in their sleeves, and not a little triumph, to see the cause of them thus betrayed by its professed friends, and the grand argument flurried by them, and so their work done to their hands. Cudworth.

Students to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes, he flurs his crimes;
He robb'd not, but he borrow'd from the poor,
And took but with intention to restore. Dryden.

ged sticks, dully falling together by the ears at any cuffs.

SNAIL. n. f. [snægl, Saxon; snegel,
 Dutch.]

1. A mimic animal which creeps on plants, some with shells on their backs; the emblem of slowness.

I can tell why a snail has a house.—Why?
 Why, to put 's head in; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case.

Fearful commenting
 Is laden servitor to dull delay;
 Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd beggary.

The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder:
 Snail flow in profit, but he sleeps by day
 More than the wild cat.

Seeing the snail, which every where doth roam,
 Carrying his own house full, still is at home,
 Follow, for he is easy-pac'd; this snail
 Is thus own palace, or the world's thy goal.

There may be as many ranks of beings in the insensible world superior to us, as we ourselves are far not to all the ranks of being beneath us in this visible world, even though we descend below the snail and the oyster.

2. A name given to a drone, from the slow motion of a snail.

Why prit'it thou to thyself, and answer'st not?
 Dromed, thou drone, thou snail, thou slug, thou sot!

SNAIL-CLAY OF Snail-trefoil. n. f. [trifol- ium, Lat.] An herb.

SNAKE. n. f. [snaca, Sax. snake, Dutch.]

A serpent of the oviparous kind, distinguished from a viper. The snake's bite is harmless. Snake in poetry is a general name for a serpent.

Gl'ber's shew beguiles him;
 As the snake, rolled in a flow'ry bank,
 With shining chequer'd slough, doth sling a child,
 That for the beauty thinks it excellent.

We have catch'd the snake, not kill'd it:
 She'll close, and be herself; whilst our poor malice
 Remains in danger of her former teeth.

The parts must have their outlines in waves, resembling the gliding of a snake upon the ground:
 they must be smooth and even.

Nor chalk, nor crumbling stones, the food of snakes.

That work in hollow earth their winding track.

SNAKE-ROOT. n. f. [snake and root.] A species of birthwort growing in Virginia and Carolina.

SNAKE-HEAD Iris. n. f. [hermodactylus,
 Latin.] A plant.

The characters are: it hath a hily-snap'd flower, of one leaf, shaped exactly like an iris; but has a tuberoso root, divided into two or three dogs, like oblong bulbs.

SNAKEWEED OF Bifort. n. f. [bifurtus,
 Latin.] A plant.

SNAKEWOOD. n. f. [from snake and wood.]

What we call snakewood is properly the smaller branches of the root of a tall straight tree growing in the island of Timor, and other parts of the East.
 It has no remarkable smell; but is of an intensely bitter taste. The Indians are of opinion, that it is a certain remedy for the bite of the hooded serpent, and from thence its name of Agave colubrinum, or snakewood. We very seldom use it.

SNA'KY. adj. [from snake.]
 1. Serpentine; belonging to a snake; resembling a snake.

Venomous tongue, tip with vile adder's sting,
 Of that fell kind with which the furies tell
 Their snaky heads do comb.

The crooked arms meander bow'd with his snaky flood,
 Resign'd for conduct the choice youth of all their mortal brood.

The true lovers knot had its original from nodus Herculeus, or Hercules's knot, resembling the snaky complication in the caduceus, or rod of Hermes.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs
 His snaky steps, girded with snaky wiles.

2. Having serpents.
 Look look unto this snaky rod,
 And stop your ears against the charming god.

In his hand
 He took caduceus, his snaky wand.

What was that snaky-headed gorgon shield
 That wife Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin!
 Wherewith she free'd her toes to congeal'd stone?

His flying hat was fasten'd on his head;
 Wings on his heels were hung, and in his hand
 He holds the virtue of the snaky wand.

TO SNAP. v. a. [the same with knap.]

1. To break at once; to break short.

If the chain of necessity be no stronger, but that it may be snapped to easily in sunder; if his will was no otherwise determined from without himself, but only by the signification of your desire; and my modest intreaty, then we may conclude, human affairs are not always governed by absolute necessity.

Light is broken like a body, as when 'tis snapped in pieces by a tougher body.

Dauntless as death, away he walks;
 Breaks the doors open, snaps the locks;

Searches the parlour, chamber, study,
 Nor stops till he has culprits' body.

2. To strike with a knocking noise, or sharp sound.

The bowzy fire
 First shook from out his pipe the seeds of fire,
 Then snapt his box.

3. To bite.

A gentleman passing by a conch, one of the horses snapt off the end of his finger.

All mungrel curs bawl, snarl, and snap, where the foe lies before him.

A notion generally received, that a lion is dangerous to all women who are not virgins, may have given occasion to a foolish report, that my lion's jaws are so contrived as to snap the hands of any of the female sex, who are not thus qualified.

He snaps decent air with empty jaws,
 The subtle hare darts swift beneath his paws.

4. To catch suddenly and unexpectedly.

Su Richard Graham tells the marquis he would snap one of the kids, and make some suit to carry him close to their lodging.

Some with a noise and greasy light
 Are snapt, as men catch larks at night.

You should have thought of this before you was taken; for now you are in no danger to be snapt singing again.

Did I not see you, rascal, did I not,
 When you lay snug to snap young Damon's goat?

Related seem on watch to lie,
 And snap some cully passing by.

5. [snappen, Dutch.] To treat with sharp language.

Capoc'h'd your rabbins of the synod,
 And snapp'd their canons with a why not.

A fairly ill-bred lord,
 That chides and snaps her up at every word.

TO SNAP. v. n.

1. To break short; to fall asunder; to break without bending.

Note the ship's snappers; the mastshak'd with an ague, and the bald and weak
 With a salt droopy clogg'd; and ear mashing
 Snapping, like to too high-stretch'd treble strings.

The backbone is divided into so many vertebrae for commodious bending, and not one intire rigid bone, which, being of that length, would have been often in danger of snapping in sunder.

If your steel be too hard, that is, too brittle, if it be a spring, it will not bow; but with the least bending it will snap asunder.

The makers of these needles should give them a due temper: for if they are too soft, they will bend;
 and if they are too brittle, they snap.

2. To make an effort so bite, with eagerness.

If the young dame be a bar for the old pike, I see no reason but I may snap at him.

We snapped at the bait without ever dreaming of the hook that goes along with it.

At people's heels with frothy chaps.

SNAP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of breaking with a quick motion.

SNA'PDRAGON OF Calf's Snout. n. f. [an- tirrhinum, Latin.]

1. A plant.

2. A kind of play, in which brandy is set on fire, and raisins thrown into it, which those who are unused to the sport are afraid to take out; but which may be safely snatched by a quick motion, and put blazing into the mouth, which being closed, the fire is at once extinguished.

SNA'PPER. n. f. [from snapping.] One who snaps.

My father named me Antolucius, being letter'd under Mercury; who, as I am, was likewise a snapper up of unconsider'd trifles.

SNA'PPISH. adj. [from snapping.]

1. Eager to bite.

The snapping cur, the passenger's annoy,
 Close at my heel with yelping treble cries.

They lived in the temple; but were such snapping curs, that they frighted away most of the votaries.

2. Peevish; sharp in reply.

SNA'PPISHLY. adv. [from snapping.] Peevishly; tartly.

SNA'PPISHNESS. n. f. [from snapping.]

SNA'RE. n. f. [snara, Swedish and Islandick; snare, Danish; snoor, Dutch.]

1. Any thing set to catch an animal; a gin; a net; a noose.

O poor hapless nightingale, thought I,
 How sweet thou sing'st, how near the deadly snare!

2. Any thing by which one is entrapped or entangled.

This I think for your own profit, not that I may cast a snare upon you.

A fool's mouth is his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul.

Propound to thyself a constant rule of living, which, though it may not be fit to observe scrupulously, lest it become a snare to thy conscience, or endanger thy health, yet let not thy rule be broken.

For thee ordain'd a help, became thy snare.

For thee ordain'd a help, became thy snare.

Beauty, wealth, and wit,
And promise, to the power of love submit;
The spreading snare for all mankind is laid,
And lovers all betray, or are betray'd. Dryden.
To SNARE. v. a. [from the noun.] To en-trap; to entangle; to catch in a noose.

Glister threw
Regul'd him, as the mournful crocodile
With sorrowful relenting passengers. —Shaksp.
The wicked is snared in the work of his own hands. Pfulms.

Warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth, lest that too heavily form, pretended
To hellish falsehood, snare them. Milton.

To SNARL. v. n. [snayren, Dutch.]
1. To growl as an angry animal; to gnar.

What! were you snarling all before I came,
Ready to catch each other by the throat,
And turn you all your hatred now on me? Shaksp.

He is born with teeth!
And so I was; which plainly signified
That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog.
Shaksp.

Now, for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty,
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarl in the gentle eyes of peace. —Shaksp.
The ties even of the savage herd are safe;
All, when they snarl or bite, have no return
But courtship from the male. Dryden.

An angry ear
Starts while he feeds. Dryden and Lee.

2. To speak roughly; to talk in rude terms.

'Tis malicious and unmanly to snarl at the little lapses of a pen, from which Virgil himself stands not exempted. Dryden.

The honest farmer and his wife,
Two years declin'd from prime of life,
Had struggled with the marriage noose,
As almost every couple does:

Sometimes my plague! sometimes my darling!
Kissing to-day, to-morrow snarling. Prior.
Where hast thou been snarling odious truths, and entertaining company with discourse of their diseases? Congreve.

To SNARL. v. a. To entangle; to embarrass. I know not that this sense is well authorized.

Confused snarled conferences render it difficult to pull out thread by thread. Decay of Piety.

SNARLER. n. f. [from snarl.] One who snarls; a growling, surly, quarrelsome, insulting fellow.

Should stupid liels grieve your mind,
You soon a remedy may find,
Lie down obscure, like other folks,
Below the lash of snarlers jokes. Swift.

SNARLY. adj. [from snare.] Entangling; insidious.

Spiders in the vault their snarly webs have spread.
Dryden.

SNAST. n. f. The snuff of a candle.
It first burned tar, till some part of the candle was consumed, and the sawdust gathered about the snast; but then it made the snast long and long, and burned thickly, and the candle wasted in half the time of the wax pure. Bacon.

To SNATCH. v. a. [snacken, Dutch.]
1. To seize any thing hastily.

A virtuous mind should rather with to depart this world with a kind of snatch dissolution, than to be suddenly cut off in a moment; rather to be taken than snatched away from the face of the earth. Hooker.

Death,
So snatch'd, will not exempt us from the pain.
Milton.

Life's stream hurries all too fast:
In vain fated reflections we would make,
When half our knowledge we must snatch, not take.
Pope.

She snatch'd a sheet of Thulo from her bed:
Sudden she flies, and whelms it o'er the pyre;
Down sink the flames. Pope.

They, sailing down the stream,
Are snatch'd immediately by the quick'd-eyed trout,
Or darting salmon. Thomson.

2. To transport or carry suddenly.
He had scarce performed any part of the office of a bishop in the diocese of London, when he was snatched from thence, and promoted to Canterbury.
Clarendon.

O nature!
Enrich me with the knowledge of thy works.
Thomson.
Snatch me to heaven.

To SNATCH. v. n. To bite or catch eagerly at something.

Lords will not let me: if I had a monopoly of fool, they would have part on't; nay, the ladies too will be snatching. Shaksp.

He shall snatch on the right hand, and be hungry.
Hudibras.

Lycus, swifter of his feet,
Runs, doubles, winds and turns, amidst the war;
Springs to the walls, and leaves his foes behind,
And snatches at the beam he first can find. Dryden.

SNATCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A hasty catch.

2. A short fit of vigorous action.
After a shower to weed a snatch;
More easily weed with the root to dispatch. Tupper.

3. A small part of any thing; a broken part.

She chaunted snatches of old tunes,
As one incapable of her own distress. —Shaksp.
In this work attempts will exceed performances, it being compulsi by snatches of time, as medical variations would permit. Brown.

4. A broken or interrupted action; a short fit.

The snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his. —Shaksp.
They move by fits and snatches; so that it is not conceivable how they conduce unto a motion, which, by reason of its perpetuity, must be regular and equal. Watkins.

We have often little snatches of sunshine and fair weather in the most uncomfortable parts of the year. Spectator.

5. A quip; a shuffling answer.
Come, leave your snatches, yield me a direct answer. Shaksp.

SNATCHER. n. f. [from snatch.] One that snatches, or takes any thing in haste.

They of those marches Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our island from the pilfering borderers.

—We do not mean the courting snatches only,
But fear the main intendment of the Scot. Shaksp.

SNATCHINGLY. adv. [from snatching.]
Hastily; with interruption.

To SNEEK. v. n. [Hebrew, Saxon; saige, Danish.]

1. To creep silyly; to come or go as if afraid to be seen.

Once the eagle, England, being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weazel, Scot,
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs.
Shaksp.

Sneak not away, fir; for the friar and you Must have a word anon: lay hold on him. Shaksp.

Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and sneak'd away.
Dryden.

I ought not to turn my back, and to sneak off in silence, and leave the truth to be baffled, bleeding, and slain. Watts.

He sneak'd into the grave,
A monarch's half, and half a harlot's slave.
Dunciad.

Are you all ready? Here's your mask here:
Author, sneak off; we'll tickle you, my dear.
More.

2. To behave with meanness and servility; to crouch; to truckle.

I need salute no great man's threshold, sneak to none of his friends to speak a good word for me to my confederate. South.

Nothing can support minds drooping and sneak- ing, and inwardly reproaching them, from a sense of their own guilt, but to see others acted. South.

When int'rest calls off all her sneaking train,
When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the train,
She waits, or to the scaffold, or the cell,
When the last ling'ring friend has bid farewell. Pope.

Tom struts a soldier, open, bold, and brave;
Will sneaks a scriv'ner, an exceeding knave. Pope.

SNEAKER. n. f. A small vessel of drink.
I have just let the right worshipping and his mag-nificious about a sneaker of five gallons. Spectator.

2. Covetous; niggardly; meanly parsimonious.

SNEAKINGLY. adv. [from sneaking.]
1. Meanly; servilely.

Do all things like a man, not sneakingly.
Think the king sees thee still. Herbert.

While you sneakingly submit,
And beg our pardon at our feet,
Discourag'd by your guilty fears
To hope for quarter for your ears. Hudibras.

2. In a covetous manner.

SNEAKINGNESS. n. f. [from sneaking.]
1. Niggardliness.

2. Meanness; pitifulness.

SNEAKUP. n. f. [from sneak.] A cowardly creeping, insidious scoundrel. Obsolete.

The prince is a jack, a sneakup, and it he was here, I would cudgel him like a dog, it he was a lay so. Shaksp.

To SNEAP. v. a. [This word forms a corruption of snub, or of snap, to reprimand.
Perhaps snap is in that sense from snubbe, Danish.

Men shulde him snubbe bitterly.
Chaucer.

1. To reprimand; to check.

2. To nip.

What may
Breed upon our absence, may there blow
No sneaping winds at home. Shaksp.

SNEAP. n. f. [from the verb.] A reprimand; a check.

My lord, I will not undergo this sneap without reply: you call honourable boldness impudentness: if a man will count'ry and say nothing he is virtuous. Shaksp.

To SNEB. v. a. [properly to snub. See SNEAP.] To check; to chide; to reprimand.

Which made this foolish briar wax so bold,
That on a time he call him to bold.
And snubbe the good oak, for he was old. Spectator.

To SNEER. v. n. [This word is apparently of the same family with snore and snort.]

1. To show contempt by looks; nasal to pendere adunco.

2. To insinuate contempt by covert expressions.

The wolf was by, and the fox in a sneering way advised him not to irritate a prince against his subjects. L'Estrange.

I could be content to be a little sneered at in a line, for the sake of the pleasure I should have in reading the rest. Prior.

If there has been any thing expressed with too much severity, it will fall upon those sneering at during writers of the age against religion, who have left reason and decency. Watts.

3. To utter with grimace.

I have not been sneering fulsome lies, and narrow flattery, at a little tawdry whore. Congreve.

4. To show awkward mirth.

I had no power over one muscle in their faces, though they sneered at every word spoken by each other. Lamb.

SNEER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A look of contemptuous ridicule.

Did not the fores of more impartial rain:
Arise and virtue, balance all again? Pope.

5. An expression of ludicrous scorn.
Socrates or Caesar might have a fool's coat clapt upon them, and in this disguise neither the wisdom of the one, nor the majesty of the other, could secure them from a foerer. Warton.

6. foerer. n. f. [from foerer.] He that sneers or shows contempt.

To SNEEZE. v. n. [snezan, Saxon; snezen, Dutch.] To emit wind audibly
by the nose.

It one be about to sneeze, rubbing the eyes till they run will prevent it; for that the humour devoting to the nostrils is diverted to the eyes.

Bacon.
If the pain be more intense and deeper within,
through the membranes, there will be an itching in the palate and nostrils, with frequent sneezing.
Wifeman.

To thee Cupid sneez'd aloud;
And every lucky omen tent before,
To meet the landing on the Spartan shore. Dryden.
If any thing offends the head, it hath a power to free itself by sneezing. Ray.

Violent sneezing produceth convulsions in all the muscles of respiration: to great an alteration can be produced only by the tickling of a feather; and if the action of sneezing should be continued by some very acrid substance, it will produce headach, universal convulsions, fever, and death. Arbuthnot.

Another put the sharp end of his half pipe a good way up into my nostril, which tickled my nose like a straw, and made me sneeze violently.

Swift.
SNEEZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Emission of wind audibly by the nose.

I heard the rack,
A carth and fly would mingle; but Fate flows, though mortals fear them,
A dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
As to the man's whole frame as a sneeze
To act his universe, and soon are gone.

Milton.
We read in Godenius, that upon a sneeze of the emperor of Monomotapa, there passed acclama-tions successively through the city. Brown.

SNIZELWORT. n. f. [ptarmica, Latin.] A plant.

That hit at will them to revile or snib. Hub. Tale.
SNIP and snic. n. f. A combat with knives.

Among the Dunkirkers, where snick and snic was in fashion, a boatswain, with some of our men drinking together, became quarrelsome: one of our men laid him down; then kneeling upon his breast, he drew out a knife, sucking in his snib, and cut him from the ear towards the mouth. Wifeman.

To SNIGGER or Snigger. v. n. To laugh silly, wantonly, or contemptuously; to laugh in one's sleeve. Dicit.

To SNIFF. v. n. [sniffa, Swedish.] To draw breath audibly by the nose.

So then you look'd fearful, and snift at the dean,
As who should say, Now am I kiddy and lean?

Swift.

To SNIGGLE. v. n.
Sniggle is thus performed: in a warm day,
when the water is lowest, take a strong small hook, tied to a string about a yard long; and then into one of the holes, where an eel may hide herself, with the help of a short stick put in your bait leisurely, and as far as you may conveniently: if within the sight of it, the eel will bite instantly, and as certainly gorge it: pull him out by degrees. Walton.

To SNIP. v. a. [snippen, Dutch.] To cut at once with scissars.

The snus should be laid open, which was snips up about two inches with a pair of probe-scissars, and the incised lips dressed. Wifeman.

When tradesmen brought extravagant bills, Sir Roger used to bargain to cut off a quarter of a yard: he wore a pair of scissars for this purpose, and would snip it off nicely. Arbuthnot.

Putting one blade of the scissars up the gut, and the other up the wound, snip the whole length of the fistula. Sharp.

SNIP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A single cut with scissars.

What! this a sleeve?
Here's snip and nip, and cut, and snip and snip,
Like to a censor in a barber's shop. Shakespeare.

The ulcer would not cure farther than it was laid open; therefore with one snip more I laid it open to the very end. Wifeman.

2. A small shred.

Those we keep within compass by small snips of emphat, hoping to defend the parts about; but, in spite of all, they will spread farther. Wifeman.

3. A share; a snack. A low word.

He found his friend upon the mending hand, which he was glad to hear, because of the snip that he himself expected upon the dividend. I. F. strange.

SNIP. n. f. [sneppe, German; snitte,
Sax. ysnit, Welsh.]

1. A small fen fowl with a long bill.

a high fermenting diet; as old cheese, birds feeding in fens, as geese, ducks, woodcocks, snipes, and twans. Flayer.

2. A fool; a blockhead.

Thus do I ever make my fool my purse;
For I mine own gam'd knowledge should profane,
If I should time expend with such a snipe,
But for my sport and profit. Shakespeare.

SNIPPER. n. f. [from snip.] One that snips.

SNIPPET. n. f. [from snip.] A small part;
a share.

Witches simpling, and on gibbets
Cutting from maleficious snippets,
Or from the pally tips of curs. Hudibras.

SNIPSNAP. n. f. [a cant word formed by reduplication of snip.] Tart dialogue, with quick replies.

Dennis and dissonance, and captious art,
And snipsnap short, and interruption short. Pope.

SNITE. n. f. [snite, Saxon.] A snipe.

This is perhaps the true name; but snipe prevails.

Of tame birds Cornwall hath doves, geese, and ducks: of wild, quail, rail, snite, and wood dove.

To SNITE. v. a. [snytan, Saxon.] To blow the nose.

Nor would any one be able to snite his nose, or to sneeze; in both which the passage of the breath through the mouth, being intercepted by the tongue, is forced to go through the nose. Grew.

Funeral tears are hired out as mourning clonks, and whether we go to our graves snivelling or sniging, 'tis all mere form. I. F. strange.

Away goes he snivelling and yelping, that he had dropt his axe into the water. I. F. strange.

SNIVELLER. n. f. [from snivel.] A weeper; a weak lamerter.

He'd more lament when I was dead,
Than all the snivellers round my bed. Swift.

To SNORE. v. n. [snorcken, Dutch.] To breathe hard through the nose, as men in sleep.

I did unreverently blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snore for thyself.
Ben Jonson.

What's railing heroes, and what's wounded gods,
Make some suspect he snored he slept as gods.

Requiem.

He may lie in his shades, and snore on to dawn-day for me; unless I see further reason of disturbing his repose. Stillingfleet.

Is not yonder Proteus' cave?

It is; and in it lies the god asleep;

And snoring by

We may deterly

The monsters of the deep. Dryden.

The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,

Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den,

Belching raw gobbets from his maw, o'ercharg'd

With purple wine and cruddled gore confus'd.

Addison.

SNORE. n. f. [snopna, Saxon, from the verb.] Audible respiration of sleepers through the nose.

The rusted groons

Do mock their charge with snores: I've drugg'd their pollers. Shakespeare.

He gives the winter's snow her airy birth,

And bids her virgin fleeces clothe the earth.

Sandys.

Soft as the fleeces of descending snows. Pope.

To SNOW. v. n. [snapan, Sax. sneuwen,
Dutch.] To fall in snow.

The hills being high about them, it snows at the tops of them oftener than it rains. Brown.

TO SNOW, v. a. To scatter like snow.
If thou be'st born to be strange fight,
Hide ten thousand days and nights,
Till age show white hairs on thee. Donne.

SNOWBALL, n. f. [snow and ball.] A round lump of congelated snow.

They passed to the east-riding of Yorkshire, their company daily increasing, like a snowball in rolling. Hayward.

His bulky folly gathers as it goes,
And, rolling o'er you, like a snowball grows. Dryden.

A snowball having the power to produce in us the ideas of white, cold, and round, the powers, as they are in the snowball, I call qualities; and, as they are sensations in our understandings, ideas. Locke.

SNOWBROTH, n. f. [snow and broth.] Very cold liquor.

Angelo, a man whose blood
Is very snowbroth, one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense. Shakespeare.

SNOWDROP, n. f. [narcissolucicium, Lat.] An early flower.

When we tried the experiment with the leaves of those purely white flowers that appear about the end of winter, called snowdrops, the event was not much unlike that newly mentioned. Boyle.

The little shape, by magic power,
Grew less and less, contracted to a flower;
A flower that first in this sweet garden smil'd,
To virgin Idred, and the snowdrop styl'd. Tickel.

SNOW-WHITE, adj. [snow and white.] White as snow.

A snow-white bull shall on your shore be slain;
His offer'd entrails cast into the main. Dryden.

SNOWY, adj. [from snow.] 1. White like snow.

So sneezes a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows sneezes. Shakespeare.

Now I fee thy jolly train:
Snowy headed winter leads,
Spring and summer next succeeds;
Yellow autumn brings the rear;
Thou art father of the year. Rowe.

The blushing ruby on her snowy breast
Render'd its panting whiteness more confess. Prior.

2. Abounding with snow.

These first in Crete
And Ida known; thence on the snowy top
Of cold Olympus rul'd the middle air. Milton.

TO SNUG, v. n. [snuffen, Dutch.] To sob with convulsion.

TO SNUDGE, v. n. [sniger, Danish.] To lie idle, close, or snug.

Now he will fight it out, and to the wart;
Now eat his bread in peace,
And snudge in quiet, now he scorns increase;
Now all day spares. Herbert.

SNUFF, n. f. [snuff, Dutch, snoot.] 1. Snoot. In this sense it is not used.

2. The useless excrecence of a candle; whence moucher la chandelle.
My snuff and loathed part of nature should Burn itself out. Shakespeare.

But dearest heart, and dearer image, stay!
Alas! true joys at best are dreams enough:
Though you stay here, you pass too fast away;
For even at first life's taper is a snuff. Donne.

If the snuff be of a close and glutinous consistency, it may burn without any snuff, as we see in camphire, and some other bituminous substances; and most of the ancient lamps were of this kind, because none have been found with such wicks. Wilkins.

3. A candle almost burnt out.

Lamentable!
To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace
I' th' dungeon by a snuff. Shakespeare.

4. The fired wick of a candle remaining after the flame.

when dipped in the vapour. Addison.

5. Reluctant expressed by sniffling; perverse reluctance. Not used unless in low language.

What hath been seen
Either in snuffs or packings of the duke's,
Or the hard rain which both of them have borne Against the old kind king. Shakespeare.

Jupiter took snuff at the contempt, and punished him; he sent him home again. I. Strange.

6. Powdered tobacco taken by the nose.

Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
The gnomes direct, to every atom just,
The pungent grains of utillating dust. Pope.

TO SNUFF, v. a. [snuffen, Dutch.] 1. To draw in with the breath.

A hauser will put up her nose, and snuff in the air, against rain.

With delight he snuff'd the smell
Of mortal change on earth. Milton.

He snuffs the wind, his heels the sand estate;
But when he stands collected in his might,
He roars, and promises a more successful fight. Dryden.

The youth,
Who holds the nearest station to the light,
Already seems to snuff the vital air,
And leans just forward on a shining spear. Dryden.

My troops are mounted; their Numidian steeds
Snuff up the wind, and long to scour the desert. Addison.

My nag's greatest fault was snuffing up the air about Blackden-town, whereby he became such a lover of liberty, that I could scarce hold him in. Swift.

2. To scent.

The cow looks up, and from afar can find
The change of heav'n, and snuffs it in the wind. Dryden.

For thee the bulls rebel through the groves,
And tempt the itrean, and snuff their absent loves. Dryden.

O'er all the blood-hound boasts superior skill,
To scent, to view, to turn, and boldly kill!
His fellows vain alarms reject with scorn,
True to the master's voice, and learned horn:
His nostrils oft, if ancient fame sing true,
Trace the fly felon through the tainted dew:
Once snuff'd, he follows with unalter'd aim,
Nor odours lure him from the chosen game;
Deep-mouth'd he thunders, and inslant he views,
Springs up relentless, and to death pursues. Tickel.

3. To crop the candle.

The late queen's gentlewoman
To be her mistress' mistress!
This candle burns not clear: 'tis I must snuff it,
And out it goes. Shakespeare.

Against a communion-day our lamps should be dressed, our lights snuffed, and our religion more active. Taylor.

You have got
An office for your talents fit,
To snuff the lights, and stir the fire,
And get a dinner for your hire. Swift.

TO SNUFF, v. n. 1. To snort; to draw breath by the nose.

The fury fires the peak; they snuff, they vent,
And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent. Dryden.

Says Hamper, sir, my master had me pray
Your company to dine with him to-day.
He snuffs, then follows, up the stairs he goes;
Never pulls off his hat, nor cleans his shoes. Kerr.

A water-spaniel came down the river, when that he hunted for a duck; and with a snuffle, grace, disdaining that his smelling force could as well prevail through the water as through air, waited with his eye to see whether he could catch the duck's getting up again. Sidney.

Bagpipes of the loudest drones,
With snuffling broken-winded tones,
Whose blasts of air, in pockets shut,
Sound siltier than from the gut. Hudibras.

It came to the ape to deliver his opinion, in finely and snuffled, and considered on't. Leffing.

One clad in purple,
Eats and recites some lamentable rhyme,
Some senseless Phillis in a broken note,
Snuffling at nose, and croaking in his throat. Dryden.

SNUFFLER, n. f. [from snuffle.] He that speaks through the nose.

TO SNUG, v. n. [sniger, Dutch.] 1. To lie close; to snudge.

There, snugging well, he well appear'd content
So to have done amis, to be silent. Shakespeare.

As the loving couple lay snugging together,

SOFT. adj. [from soft, Saxon; ijft, Dutch.]

1. Not hard.
Hard and soft are names we give things, only in relation to the constitution of our own bodies; that being called hard, which will put us to pain sooner than change figure, by the pressure of any part of our bodies; and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts upon a easy touch. Locke.

Some bodies are hard, and some soft: the hardness is caused by the junctions of the spirits, which, in a greater degree, make not only hard but fragil. Bacon

Hot and cold were in one body fixt,
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt.
Dryden.

SOFT. interj. Hold; stop; not so fast.

But soft, I pray you; did king Richard then Proclaim my brother? Shakespeare.

Oh! come in, Emilia;
Soft, by and by, let me the curtains draw. Shakespeare.

But soft, my mate, the world is wide,
And all at once was not detected. Shakespeare.

TO SOFTEN. v. a. [from soft.]

1. To make soft; to make less hard.
Podies, into which the water will enter, long soothing with rather soften than indurate. Bacon.

Their arrow's point they soften in the flame,
And founding hammers break its barbed frame. Green.

2. To intenerate; to make less fierce or obstinate; to mollify.
I will soften stony hearts. Milton.

Our friends see not our faults, or conceal them, or soften them by their representation. Addison.

I would correct the harsh expressions of one party, by softening and reconciling methods. Watts.

3. To make easy; to compose; to make placid; to mitigate; to palliate; to alleviate.

Call round her touch each object of desire;
Bid her by all that chears or softens life,
The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope.

Musick the fiercest griefs can charm;
Musick can soften pain to ease. Pope.

And make deep sorrow and mad griefs please. Pope.

4. To make less harsh, less vehement, less violent.

He bore his great commotion in his look,
But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke. Dryden.

5. To make less glaring.

6. To make tender; to enervate.

TO SOFTEN. v. n.

1. To grow less hard.

Many bodies, that will hardly melt, will soften,
as soon in the fire? Bacon.

2. To grow less obdurate, cruel, or obstinate.

He may soften at the sight of the child;
The silence often of pure innocence
Persuades, when the doing fails. Shakespeare.

SOFTEN. v. a. [from soft.]

1. Without hardness.

2. Not violently, not forcibly.
Solid bodies, if very softly or gently, give no sound, as when a man treadeth very softly upon boards. Bacon.

3. Not loudly.
Abandon his clothes, and went softly. Shakespeare.

In this dark stile of soft peace he town,
And to the gentle I shew direct your steps. Dryden.

4. Gently; placidly.
Death will soften me,
And lay me softly in a native dust.
To pay the latest of my debt of trust. Dryden

She with a wreath of garlands crowns his bed,
And softly lays him on a flow'ry bed. Dryden.

5. Mildly; tenderly.

The king must die;
Though pity softly plead within my soul,
Yet he must die, that I may make you great. Dryden.

SOFTNER. n. f. [from soft.]

1. That which makes soft.

2. One who palliates.

Those softners and expedient-mongers hale their heads so strongly, that we can hear their pockets jingle. Scott.

SOFTNESS. n. f. [from soft.]

1. The quality of being soft; quality contrary to hardness.

Softness cometh by the greater quantity of spirits, which ever induce yielding and cessaand by the more equal spreading of the tender parts, which thereby are more sliding and softening; as in gold. Bacon.

2. Mildness; kindness.

A wife man, when there is a necessity of expressing any evil actions, should do it by a word that is a second idea of kindness or softness, or a word that carries in it rebuke and severity. Bacon.

3. Civility; gentleness.

They turn the softness of the tongue into the hardness of the teeth. Bacon.

Improve these virtues, with a softness of manners,
and a sweetness of conversation. Dryden.

4. Effeminacy; vitious delicacy.

So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and effeminacy, are prevented; and there is but little room for temptation. Taylor.

He was not delighted with the softness of the court. Charnock.

5. Timorousness; pusillanimity.

This virtue could not proceed out of fear or softness; for he was valiant and active. Bacon.

Saving a man's self, or suffering, if with reason, is virtue; if without it, is softness or obliquity. Greene.

6. Quality contrary to hardness.

Softness of sounds is distinct from the quality of sounds. Bacon.

7. Facility; gentleness; candour; eagerness to be affected.

Such was the ancient simplicity and softness of spirit which sometimes prevailed in the world, that they, whole words were even as oracles, as soft men, seemed ever more loth to give counsel than any thing publicly received in the church of God. Plutarch.

8. Contrariety to energetick vehemence.

Who but thyself the mad and earnest man, with strength and softness, energy and energism. Shakespeare.

9. Mildness; meekness.

For contemplation he and valour form'd,
For softness he and sweet attractive grace. Shakespeare.

Her table is a book
This softness from thy finger took. Bacon.

SOFT. interj. A term of calling from a distant place.

TO SOFT. v. a. [Italian, Saxon; soften, old German; softer, French.]

1. To soften; to dirt; to pollute; to stain; to sully.

Ailly man in simple weeds pollute,
And soften with dirt of the long dined way. Shakespeare.

Although some heretics have at times
yet the sun is not soften in passage. Bacon.

Myself with sin, I then but vainly toil
I would not soften these pure ambrosial words
With the rank vapours of this low-born world. Shakespeare.

But trust of knowledge, if this be to know,
Which leaves us naked thus, of honest words
Of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our sacred ornaments now soften and if in One, who could not for a taste of the flesh, could taste the softness of earth,
While reflecting on a mangled Ombra's blood. Shakespeare.

A hateful service, that diffus'd the knees
Of every a soldier. Chapman
I have not yet forgot I am a king;
If I have wrong'd thee, charge me face to face;
I have not yet forgot I am a soldier. Deighton

2. It is generally used of the common men, a distinct from the commanders.

It is not meet that any one, before he came to be a soldier, should have been a soldier. Spenser

SOLDIERLIKE. } adj. [soldier and like.]

SOLDIERLY. } Martial; military; becoming a soldier.

Altho' that the first he had fought with he felt his love for him as a soldierly duty, practice had now made them comparable to the best. Shakespeare

I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldier's word, and a word of good command. Shakespeare

They, according to a soldierly custom, in cases of extremity, by interchange of a kiss by every of them upon the cheeks of others, sealed a resolution to maintain the place. Hawes

The men as well as his hands confessed, that it was as soldierly an action as had been performed on either side. Clarendon

SOLDIERSHIP. n. f. [from soldier.] Military character; martial qualities; behaviour becoming a soldier; martial skill.

Thy father and myself in friendship
Fought tried our soldiership, he did look far Into the fierceness of the time, and was Displeased of the bravest. Shakespeare

By sea you throw away
The absolute soldiership you have by land,
Distract your army, which doth most confide
Of war mark'd footmen. Shakespeare

To SOLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with soles; as, to sole a pair of shoes.
His feet were soled with a treble tuft of a close short tawney down. Grew

SOLE. adj. [sol, old Fr. solus, Lat.]

1. Single; only.

Take not upon thee to be judge alone: there is no sole judge but only one: say not to others, Receive my sentence, when their authority is above thine. Hooker

Ophiuchus every where expressed the influence and sole power of one God, though he united the name of Jupiter. Raleigh

To me shall be the glory sole among Th' eternal powers. Milton

A nothing to us left through the branches went,
That tripp'd them bare, and one sole way they went. Deighton

He, sole in power, at the beginning said,
Let sea, and air, and earth, and heav'n be made;
And it was so: and I, when he shall ordain
In other sort, has but to speak again,
And they shall be no more. Prior

2. [In law.] Not married.

Some others are such as in law cannot make his wife, though he himself be sole and unmarried. Ascham

SOLE. n. f. [solus, Lat.] Unfitness of one word to another; impropriety in language. A barbarism may be in one word, a solecism must be of more.

There is scarce a solecism in writing which the best author is not guilty of, if we be at liberty to read him in the words of some manuscript. Addison

SOLE. adv. [from sole.] Singly; only.

You knew my father well, and in him me,
Left sole heir to all his lands. Shakespeare

This night's great business Shall to all our nights and days to come Give sole sovereign sway and masterydom. Shakespeare

That the intemperate heat of the climate solely occasions this complexion, experience admits not. Brown

This truth is pointed chiefly, if not solely, upon sinners of the first rate, who have cast off all regard for piety. Atterbury

They all chose rather to rest the cause solely on logical disputation, than upon the testimonies of the ancients. Waterland

SOLE. n. f. [solemn, French; solemn,
Latin.]

1. Anniversary; observed once a year with religious ceremonies.

The worship of this image was advanced, and a solemn supplication observed every year. Stillingfleet

2. Religiously grave; awful.

His holy rites and solemn tenets profan'd Milton

3. Formal; ritual; religiously regular.

The necessary business of a man's calling, with some, will not afford much time for set and solemn prayer. Duty of Man

4. Striking with seriousness; sober; serious.

Then 'gan he loudly through the house to call,
But no one came to answer to his cry.
There reign'd a solemn silence over all. P. Queen

To swage with solemn touches troubled thoughts.
Nor then the solemn nightingale ceas'd warbling. Milton

5. Grave; affectedly serious.

When Steel reflects upon the many solemn strong banners to our succellion, of laws and oaths, he thinks all fear vanishes: so do I, provided the epithet solemn goes for nothing, because, though I have heard of a solemn day, and a solemn cockcomb, yet I can conceive no idea of a solemn banner. Swift

SOLE. n. f. [solemn, Fr. from SOLE. n. f. [solemn, Latin.]

1. Ceremony or rite annually performed.

Were these annual solemnities only practised in the church? Nelson

Though the days of solemnity, which are but few, must quickly finish that outward exercise of devotion which appertains to such times; yet they increase men's inward dispositions to virtue for the present, and, by their frequent returns, bring the same to length to perfection. Argue

Great was the cause; our old solemnities
From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise;
But, far'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the god of day. Pope

2. Religious ceremony.

3. Awful ceremony or procession.

The lady Constance,
Some speedy messenger bid repair
To our solemnity. Shakespeare

The moon, like to a silver bow
New bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities. Shakespeare

There may be greater danger in using such con-positions in churches, at arrangements, plays, &c. solemnities. Shakespeare

What funeral pomp shall floating Tiber see,
When rising from his bed he views the sad solemnity? Shakespeare

Though the forms and solemnities of the judgment may bear some resemblance to those are acquainted with here, yet the rule of proce-ding shall be very different. Shakespeare

4. Manner of acting awfully serious.

With much more skilful cruelty, and horrid solemnity, he caus'd each thing to be prepared his triumph of tyranny. Shakespeare

5. Gravity; steady seriousness.

The flatness and gravity of the Spaniards itself in the solemnity of their language. Spectator

6. Awful grandeur; grave flatness; sober dignity.

A diligent decency was in Polydorus, above others, to whom though the highest praise be tributed by the most, yet some think he want solemnity. Shakespeare

7. Affected gravity.

Prythee, Virgilius, turn thy solemnity out o' the
And go along with us. Shakespeare

Be this truth eternal ne'er forgot, Solemnity's a cover for a lot. Shakespeare

This speech ended with a solemnity of voice, Female Quaker

SOLE. n. f. [from solemn.]
The act of solemnizing; celebration.

Soon followed the solemnization of the marriage, between Charles and Anne daughters of Britain, with whom he received the duchy of Bretagne. Shakespeare

To SOLE. v. a. [solemnize, French from solemn.]

1. To dignify by particular formalities to celebrate.

Dionysius in a great battle was deprived of life, obsequies being no more solemnized by the his partakers than the blood of his enemies. Shakespeare

Baptism to be administered in one place, marriage solemnized in another. Shakespeare

Then 'gan they sprinkle all the parts with wine
And in due great haste to solemnize that day. Shakespeare

The multitude of the celestial host were heard solemnize his miraculous birth. Shakespeare

Their choice nobility and flower Met from all parts to solemnize this feast. Shakespeare

2. To perform religiously once a year.

What commandment the Jews had to celebrate their feast of dedication, is never spoken of in the law, yet solemnized even by our Saviour himself. Shakespeare

SOLE. adv. [from solemn.]

1. With annual religious ceremonies.

2. With formal gravity and flatness with affected gravity.

There are, in points of wisdom and sufficiency that do nothing of little very solemnly. Shakespeare

The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners, with selected friends, withdrew,
There in dead murmurs solemnly are wile,
Whispering like winds ere hurricanes arise. Shakespeare

3. With formal state.

Let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London. Shakespeare

4. With religious seriousness.

To demonstrate how much men are blinded by their own partiality, I do solemnly assure the reader.

As he is the only person from whom I ever heard that objection. Swift.

SOLICIT. v. a. [solicito, Latin.]

To importune; to entreat.

If you bethink yourself of any crime,
I'll counsel'd as yet to heav'n and grace,
Solicit for it straight. Shakespeare.

We heartily solicit
Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kindly government of this your land. Shaksp.

How he solicits heav'n
Himself left knows; but strangely visited people,
He more desirous of surgery, he cures. Shakespeare.

Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay
To mold me man? Did I solicit thee
From darkness to promote me? Milton.

The guardian of my faith to false did prove,
As thou art me with lawless love. Druden.

To call to action; to summon; to awake;
to excite.

This supernatural soliciting
Cannot be ill, cannot be good. Shakespeare.

Her Henry with her wondrous prattle;
To link thee on her virtues that bounteous
Beasts in grace, that extinguish art. Shakespeare.

That last solicited her longing eye.
Solicit and some tangible qualities solicit their proprietors, and force an entrance to the mind. Locke.

He is solicited by popular custom to indulge himself in forbidden liberties. Rogers

To importune; to ask.
With that the wept again, till he again soliciting the conclusion of her story, I'll tell you, said she, know the story of Amphialus? Sidney

To attempt; to try to obtain.
I view my crime, but handle at the view;
To view old pleasures, and solicit new. Pope.

To disturb; to disquiet. A latinism.
Solicit not thy thoughts with matters hid. Milt.

I find your love, and would reward it too,
But anxious fears solicit my weak breath. Dryden.

SOLICITATION. n. f. [from solicit.]
1. Importunity; act of importuning.

I can produce a man
Of male seed, far able to resist
All his solicitations, and at length
Kill his valour, and drive him back to hell. Milton.

2. Invitation; excitement.
Children are surrounded with new things, which,
by constant solicitation of their senses, draw the mind constantly to them. Locke.

SOLICITOR. n. f. [from solicit.]
1. One who petitions for another.

Be merry, Cullio;
For thy pettish shall rather die
Than ever thy cause away. Shakespeare.

2. One who does in Chancery the business which is done by attorneys in other courts.

For the king's attorney and solicitor general, their continual use for the king's service requires near every way fit. Bacon.

SOLICITOUS. adj. [solicitor, Latin.] Anxious; careful; concerned. It has commonly about before that which causes anxiety; sometimes for or of. For is proper before something to be obtained.

Our hearts are pure, when we are not solicitous of the opinion and censures of men, but only that we do our duty. Taylor.

Enjoy the present, whatsoever it be, and be not solicitous for the future. Taylor.

The colonel had been intent upon other things,
and not enough solicitous to finish the fortifications. Clarendon.

In providing money for disbanding the armies, upon which they were marvellously solicitous, there arose a question. Clarendon.

They who were in truth zealous for the preservation of the laws, were solicitous to preserve the king's honour from any indignity, and his regal power from violation. Clarendon.

Laud attended on his majesty, which he would have been excused from, if that design had not been in view, to accomplish which he was solicitous for his advice. Clarendon.

There kept their watch the legions, while the grand

In council sat, solicitous what chance Might intercept their emperor's sent. Milton.

Without sign of boast, or sign of joy,
Solicitous and blank, he thus began. Milton.

No man is solicitous about the event of that which he has in his power to dispose of. South.

You have not only been careful of my fortune, the object of your nobleness; but you have been solicitous of my reputation, which is that of your kindness. Dryden.

The tender dame, solicitous to know Whether her child should reach old age or no, Consults the sage Tiresias. Addison.

How lawful and praiseworthy is the care of a family! And yet how certainly are many people rendered incapable of all virtue, by a worldly solicitous temper! Low.

SOLICITOUSLY. adv. [from solicitous.]
Anxiously; carefully.

The medical art being conversant about the health and life of man, doctrinal errors in it are to be solicitously avoided. Boyle.

He would fairly have as solicitously promoted their learning, as ever he obstructed it. Decay of Poetry.

SOLICITUDE. n. f. [sollicitudo, Latin.] Anxiety; carefulness.

In this, by comparison, we behold the many cares and great labours of worldly men, their solitudes and outward shows, and publick ostentation, their pride, and vanities. Raleigh.

If they would but provide for eternity with the same solitude, and real care, as they do for this life, they could not fail of heaven. Taylor.

They are to be known by a wonderful solitudine for the reputation of their friends. Tatler.

SOLICITRESS. n. f. [feminine of solicitor.]
A woman who petitions for another.

I had the most earnest solicitress, as well as the fittest; and nothing could be related to my lady Hyde. Dryden.

SOLID. adj. [solidus, Lat. solide, Fr.]
1. Not liquid; not fluid.

I find that even bute'd
With solid as the lake with pond and tree. Milton.

2. Not hollow; full of matter; compact;
dense.

Thin airy things extend themselves in place,
Things solid take up little space. Cooley.

I heard hissing and long voice reboved,
And stamping feet that strike the solid ground. Dryden.

3. Having all the geometrical dimensions.
In a solid foot are 1728 solid inches, weighing 76 pound of rain water. Astrucius.

4. Strong; firm.
The duke's new palace is a noble pile, built after this manner, which makes it look very solid and majestick. Addison.

5. Sound; not weakly.
It persons devote themselves to labour, they should be well furnished with solid and strong restoration of body, to be at the service. Watts.

6. Real, not empty, true; not fallacious.

This might satisfy toler and wise men, not with soft and specious words, but with solid and solid restoration. Keble.

Either not define it all, or look out of the solid methods, and more catholic grounds of doctrine. Harrison.

The earth may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun. Milton.

7. Not light; not superficial; grave; profound.

These, wanting wit, affect gravity, and so by the name of solid men, and a solid man is, in plain English, a solid solemn fool. Pope.

SOLID. n. f. [In physics.] The part containing the fluids.

The first and most simple solids of our body are perhaps merely terrestrial, and incapable of any change or division. Boyle.

SOLIDITY. n. f. [solidité, Fr. soliditas,
Lat. from solid.]

1. Fulness of matter; not hollowiness.

2. Firmness; hardness; compactness; density; not fluidity.

That which hinders the approach of two bodies, when they are moving one towards another, I call solidity. Locke.

The stone itself, whether naked or invested with earth, is not by its solidity secured, but washed down. Woodward.

3. Truth; not fallaciousness; intellectual strength; certainty.

The most known rules are placed in so beautiful a light, that they have all the graces of novelty;
and make the reader, who was before acquainted with them, still more convinced of their truth and solidity. Addison.

His fellow-peers have attended to his eloquence, and have been convinced by the solidity of his reasoning. Prior.

This pretence has a great deal more of art than of solidity in it. Waterland.

SOLIDLY. adv. [from solid.]
1. Firmly; densely; compactly.

2. Truly; on good grounds.

A complete heaven in thought to know solidly the man end he is in the world for. Digby.

I look upon this as a sufficient ground for any rational man to take up his religion upon, and which I do by the tablet which in the world solidly to answer, namely, that it is good to be sure. South.

SOLIDNESS. n. f. [from solid.] Solidity; firmness; density.

It beareth witness to the cause may be the closeness and solidity of the wood and path of the oak. Bacon.

It is built with that unshaken solidity, that it seems he intended to make a structure to perpetuity, and to endure with the iron test of time. Hough.

SOLIDNESS. adj. [solidus and ungula, Lat.] Whole holed.

It is set down by Aristotle and Pliny, that an hole, and a solid animal, or whole holed animal, have no life, which we find repugnant unto reason. Bacon.

SOLIDNESS. n. f. [solidus and solidus, Lat.]
One who supposes only faith, not works, necessary to justification.

It may be justly feared, that the title of funda-mentals, long ordinarily confined to the doctrines of faith, hath occasioned that perverted and church of God, at which to many minds solid truths have stumbled, and fallen incorrectly, by concerning themselves with a reward of true opinions. Hannibal.
